See a defrosting miracle before your eyes in the Magic Cycle SELF-DEFROSTING KELVINATOR

Asparagus, peas, corn—with fresh flavor and food value frozen in—at start of Kelvinator defrosting cycle.

After a few minutes. Frost is melting, but the vegetables remain far below freezing in Kelvinator's constant cold.

Now frost is almost gone, and there's positively no change in the vegetables. Here's really safe automatic defrosting!

Defrosting completed. Freezing begins. No thaw in vegetables. Photographic proof of Kelvinator's superiority.

*First to defrost without

Most packages of frozen foods caution you not to refreeze if thawed. Thawing will never happen in your "Magic Cycle"* self-defrosting Kelvinator, because it defrosts quickly and automatically without hot electric elements.

Because it uses no such hot elements, Kelvinator defrosts at lower temperatures than others . . . maintains constant cold in both freezer and fresh food compartment. Frozen foods remain far below freezing, other foods are fully protected. This new "Magic Cycle" system is faster, simpler, completely dependable, far more economical. It is safe for your foods, the refrigerator, and you.

Today, your present refrigerator is worth more on a trade-in than it ever will be again. So look up the name of your Kelvinator Dealer in your Classified Phone Book. Trade in your refrigerator now and start enjoying a new "Magic Cycle" self-defrosting Kelvinator.

Imagine having all this in place of your old refrigerator!

In place of cramped, crowded space, you get 11 cu. ft. of cold space . . . cold-clear-to-the-floor!

In place of a crowded, iced-up freezer chest, you get a spacious 43-lb. ice-free freezer!

In place of too-hard or too-soft butter, you get a portable Butter Chest accessory that keeps butter "spreadable"!

Plus the convenience of huge shelf space, handy Door Shelves, giant Crispers. New beauty and year-after-year dependability, too!

*Patent applied for.

1908 FORD was the first of fifteen million Model T's that were manufactured. It was also the first Ford to have left-hand drive. Color was optional—"as long as it was black."

TODAY AS YESTERDAY,

CARS RUN THEIR BEST ON THE BEST GASOLINE

1900 HORSEY CARRIAGE had a wooden horse on the dash. The designer figured this would keep "Old Dobbin" from bolting, as he often did when he saw an early motor car.

1924 HEINE-VELOX SPECIAL was more a road locomotive than an automobile. It had a 12-cylinder engine, 148-inch wheelbase and was one of the first with hydraulic brakes.

1939 MERCURY was hailed as the latest addition to the Ford line of fine cars. This medium-priced, high-performance automobile caught on quickly with the motoring public.

1952 FORD offers many new features including a choice of two high-performing, high compression engines—a 101-horsepower six or a 110-horsepower V-8

From the day the first car chugged wearily down the road, motorists have wanted more power. More power to climb hills . . . to get away at traffic lights . . . to pull them out of tight places. Today the combination of a modern high compression engine and "Ethyl" gasoline gives power, economy and all-round performance that was only a dream a few years back.

"Ethyl" gasoline is high octane gasoline. It's the gasoline that helps modern high compression engines develop top power and efficiency. It's the gasoline you ought to buy. Remember, there's a powerful difference between gasoline and "Ethyl" gasoline.

THE AMERICAN ROAD—VI

How many cloverleaves will grow tomorrow?

THE RED MEN went single-file among the great old trees in shallow trench-like trails; the trails broadened when the white men came because they liked to walk two abreast, talking.

Those were the simple beginnings of the American Road, in colonial times. The roads spread slowly but surely, for roads unite those people who live apart—and yet for three centuries the roads were wretched things by our standards today.

The first "Good Roads Movement" came with the bicycle; indignant wheelmen organized themselves in the 1890's to try to get a few stretches of smooth going. But little was done until Henry Ford began trundling his way around sleepy Detroit in his odd-looking little horseless carriage.

Then, under the impact of the automobile, began the real American Road. The unimportant little Bureau of Public Roads suddenly became enormously important. States set up highway commissions; men debated over what kind of oil to spread on the gravel of new roads. In 1904 the whole United States spent less than $80,000,000 on road improvement. In 1950 the U. S. spent more than fifty times as much on its streets and highways—but still only half enough.

In the last 50 years, the American Road has grown into a network of 3,322,000 miles long, a network on which the Ford Motor Company alone has put over 35,000,000 cars, a substantial part of the traffic which is the very life-stream of the nation.

Much remains to be done. The job of building America is endless. Too many streets in which wagons could scrape comfortably past each other are now inadequate for the huge trucks moving vital food and materials. Many a road or street has its sharp right angles instead of gentle curves—when it was built, the curves would have cut across some farmer's field. The angles are still there, even though the farmer's field has long since been grown over with skyscrapers or blocks of city homes.

We need more of those superb new turnpikes, expressways and super-highways with their overpasses and underpasses, and glittering huge silver-steel bridges that soar across the rivers of the land.

They must keep growing day by day and mile by mile toward a future of highway safety and of free-moving traffic. The day is coming when motorists will travel from coast to coast in a whole new dimension of safety and comfort, for every community is determined to make the American Road better in every way that modern highway engineering can devise.

Thus triumphing over time, space and geography, this generation has somehow stubbornly produced its way out of a thousand different crises; it goes hopefully pushing on down the American Road toward the dream of a brighter and better future for all mankind. The Ford Motor Company affirms its faith in this generation, and its belief in the American Road as a path toward progress and peace.

TITO SPEAKS

Sirs:

LIFE has stated that Tito is a valuable ally of the U.S.A. ("Tito, Ally Not Friend," LIFE, May 12). I say this is nonsense. The Germans overran Yugoslavia in about two weeks. . . . Remember that if Yugoslavia is ever attacked by the Soviet, she will be hit from three sides—Hungary, Bulgaria and Albania. . . .

Sirs:

. . . I neither believe in nor advocate Marshal Tito's form of government, but I believe that the American people can think for themselves. It is such open discussion that makes America what it is today. Sirs:

I do not blame you in the least for presenting us with Marshal Tito's autobiography. We have to know both sides of any prominent man, whether we like him or not. . . .

SPEAKING OF PICTURES

Sirs:

A few weeks ago I wrote Walt Kelly ("Pogofenokee-land," LIFE, May 12) that we at the University of Houston would support Pogo for the Presidency if he were allowed a place in the Texas sun. Mr. Kelly's prompt reply: "It seems a lot of college people want Pogo for President. Nobody has made it clear what they want him for President of, but presumably not of Nicaragua or even of General Motors (though both are nice outfits, no offense). We have a suspicion they want him for President of these U.S. . . ."

Mr. Kelly sent us 1,000 I-Go-Pogo buttons and we ordered 2,000 more. Our University president, Dr. W. W. Kemmerer, most of the vice-presidents, faculty, one third of the student body and sundry janitors are now sporting these on their lapels. If the South is ever gonna rise, Pogo will raise it. SPEAKING OF PICTURES . . .

Lights show how Heifetz plays violin

After he saw the pictures Gjon Mili had taken of Pablo Picasso making "light drawings" in the air (LIFE, Jan. 30, 1950), Jascha Heifetz asked Mili to make light photographs of his violin playing. A few weeks ago violinist and photographer finally got together. A light was attached to Heifetz' bow close to the hand. As the virtuoso played in the dark, Mili opened his shutter to record the moving light on his film. For the three selections on the opposite page Mili used two flashes, moving his camera slightly to the right each time to get two images of the violinist. Each picture reflects the music Heifetz was playing—the fast pizzicato plucking in the Langstroth variations, the intricate, symmetrical pattern of the Bach suite, the legato bowing on the d string in the Elgar concerto, the broad phrases played on a and e strings in the Bach concerto.

PLUS-10... The only All-Nylon Cord passenger-car tire!

THIS almost incredible new tire will outlast and outperform any other tire you can buy. Here are not just one or two points of superiority, but marked, demonstrable superiority in every aspect of tire service. If you're the kind of man who demands and gets the finest, you'll never be happy with less than Goodyear's new Plus-10 Double Eagle. See it at your Goodyear dealer's now.

PLUS 1—The only passenger-car tire in the world with an all-nylon cord body.

PLUS 2—Goodyear Heat-Tempered Nylon Cords make the new Double Eagle $1\frac{1}{2}$ to 2 times as strong as standard tires.

PLUS 3—Safety! Over 2,000,000 miles of gruelling road tests prove that this is the safest tire ever designed for a passenger car.

PLUS 4—26% more nonskid tread thickness gives up to 42% more safe mileage than standard tires.

PLUS 5—Sensational new Resist-a-Skid Tread, an exclusive Goodyear development, grips at all angles of skid! Quicker on the start, safer on the stop! Gives safer, surer traction on wet roads, on snow—even on ice.

PLUS 6—Full, safe traction for life! Exclusive Resist-a-Skid tread design never needs re-cutting to restore its traction.

PLUS 7—Welcome comfort! Low-pressure, Super-Cushion ride soaks up road shocks, saves wear and tear on the car and you.

PLUS 8—New Scuff Rib protects white sidewalls when you scrape the curb.

PLUS 9—Extra beauty. Gleaming whitewall contrasts with diamond-sculptured, jet-black shoulders.

PLUS 10—Value! With all the advantages of the exclusive Resist-a-Skid Tread, the nylon cord body, this tire costs only about 5% more than ordinary premium tires made of rayon!

The birthday guest all done up for a party on this week's cover is Second-Grader Tucker Burns, 7, of New York City. Her dress (Youngland, $5.95) has a tucked bodice, is made in men's shirting, a fabric which is popular with adult females this summer. The black and white stripes of the sash and piping are repeated in Tucker's matching slippers (Capezio, $7.95). The shoes are one of the new variations on the traditional old Mary Janes, which are now available in many new colors and patterns (pp. 82-85) for a girl's special best-dress occasions.

LIFE

Vol. 32, No. 22 June 2, 1952

AN OFFER OF FRIENDSHIP is considered by Blanka who stands off in New York hotel room, reluctant to accept an animal cracker with which Congressman Holifield—himself the father of four children—hopes to win her trust. Only 2½ hours in the U.S., she still clutches the dolls she brought with her from Germany.

THE CONGRESSMAN AND THE BABY

As a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee and the Joint Atomic Energy Committee, California's Congressman Chet Holifield has wrestled with problems affecting the lives of mankind's millions. Last week he faced a new kind of problem in the realm of international relations—how to deal with one small individual, 2-year-old Blanka Sylvia Schoenhammer, late of Singen, Germany.

Blanka first came into the congressman's life through a request from some constituents. Mr.

and Mrs. Paul Craig of Los Angeles had arranged to adopt the girl and bring her from Germany to their five-room home as a sister for their two young sons. One legal snarl and then another had delayed Blanka's coming and early this month Blanka's entry visa was about to expire. Desperately the Craigs turned to Holifield, who managed to get the visa extended. Then he went beyond what a constituent expects in a favor from a congressman. Since he was planning to go home soon himself, he offered to delay his own trip, meet Blanka in New York and escort her across the country.

On May 18, at New York's International Airport, Holifield received from a sympathetic traveler an unsmiling youngster, dazed by the endless flow of unfamiliar faces, the constant shifting about and the babble of a new language. The next 30 hours called for all the warmth and protective patience a kindly man could muster to bridge the gap of language and years that separated him and the bewildered little girl.

AT ARRIVAL Hohfield holds Blanka while interpreter (left) queries traveler who took care of child.

CLEARING CUSTOMS, Blanka completes formal entry into U.S. Here Blanka and escort parted.

ON THEIR OWN, Hohfield and Blanka leave airport in taxi as he gently mops up tears of confusion.

THE MOMENT OF UNDERSTANDING comes at last as Blanka snuggles warmly into Hohfield's arms and turns on her biggest smile. The congressman's triumph over street fight of his new charge.

AT HOTEL where they spent night before continuing west, Blanka inspects more new surroundings.

BLANKA'S BEDTIME comes after the child had stood adamantly with her back turned to Hohfield.

followed three hours of patient play and coaxing. After that Blanka never knowingly would go more than a foot away from Holmfeld and when he put her on the floor she would crawl eagerly back into his lap.

"BLOW," Holmfeld advises, and Blanka complies. Despite his best care, she had caught a small cold.

BEFORE TAKE-OFF for Const. Blanka rejected help of lady attendants. Holmfeld handled situation

FIRST FEEDING is Holmfeld's initial success. "Drinken zee milch, hebchen," he pleaded. She did.

FIXING HER HAIR next day, Holmfeld shows the effects of good training as father and grandfather.

AIRBORNE and weary, the two friends sleep on westward flight that will take Blanka to new family.

GREETING BLANKA the Craigs cluster about her. Frank, 7, gives new sister first kiss. Moment later (below), realizing she is to be handed again to someone new, Blanka clings desperately to Holifield.

Baby CONTINUED

"WHY IS SHE CRYING?" THE TWO CRAIG BOYS ASK

A TEARFUL GOODBY, AN EAGER WELCOME

When the plane taxied in at the Los Angeles airport, the worn and rumpled congressman, cradling Blanka in his arms, was met by the four Craigs. Mrs. Craig looked up, and unable to express what she really felt, said, "She's wearing the funniest brown stockings." Holifield shook hands all around and heard young Frank gasp, "Sure wanted a sister. Makes more people to play with."

But Blanka was unwilling to be taken from her companion. Gently, when the time came for goodbye, Holifield pulled Blanka's arms from his neck, handed her to Mrs. Craig and, choked up, quickly departed. Then the Craigs—five of them now—went home to get acquainted.

COMFORTED by Mrs. Craig on her first night in her new home. Blanka is quiet but still wary of sleep.

OSCILLOSCOPE RECORDS HISTORIC POINT WHEN ATOMIC PARTICLES IN COSMOTRON REACH SPEED OF 170,000 MILES PER SECOND

HISTORIC SPEED—170,000 MILES A SECOND

World's biggest atom smasher, the cosmotron, accelerates nuclear particles almost to speed of light.

Last week in a low concrete building near Upton, N.Y., a small group of physicists tensely watched flickering luminous lines on an oscilloscope tube. Suddenly a line broke sharply far to the right (above), and the physicists relaxed. The world's largest atom smasher, the cosmotron, had completed its trial run at Brookhaven National Laboratory by accelerating particles of the atomic nucleus to a speed of 170,000 miles per second, 90% of the speed of light, the highest attainable. In scientific terms particles were accelerated to energies of 1.3 billion volts, the highest achieved by man. Other scientists came to congratulate them, the physicists opened a case of champagne and had a party.

Brookhaven's $5 million cosmotron consists of a circular ductlike chamber, surrounded by a gigantic electromagnet built in four separate sections. The atomic particles, in this case protons, are injected into the chamber by a nearby generator. Entering the chamber in bursts at 17,000 miles per second, the protons are caught by the cosmotron's magnetic field and caused to follow the chamber's circular path. Once in each revolution the particles are given an accelerating "kick" by waves from a radio frequency amplifier. A burst enters the cosmotron and within one second circles it 2.3 million times (a distance equivalent to four times around the world), reaches its peak energy and leaves the machine.

Within a few months Brookhaven physicists expect to achieve even higher velocities. With such high-speed particles, a new era in physics appears at hand. For now physicists will not only be able to split the atomic nucleus into its primary parts, protons and neutrons, but may also be able to split these parts into still smaller parts whose very existence is still unknown.

SITE for the cosmotron was excavated in 1949. A concrete base was laid for the machine to rest on, and the building was then built around it. An even larger accelerator is now under construction in California.

VAN DE GRAAFF GENERATOR injects particles into the cosmotron at 17,000 miles per second.

THE COSMOTRON, so named because it accelerates particles to the speed of cosmic rays, is 70 feet in diameter. The four sections of its 2,000-ton magnet almost completely enclose the chamber in which the particles travel, whose rectangular shape is visible only in the gaps between magnet sections. The Van de Graaff generator (left) shoots protons into the chamber at 17,000 miles per second. The amplifier (rear) then accelerates them farther each time they pass. The vacuum pumps exhaust the air from the chamber so speeding protons will not collide with air particles and be slowed down. Cosmotron control room is on balcony at right.

WATCHING OSCILLOSCOPE, Drs. G. K. Green, John Blewett, Luke Yuan wait for pattern (top, opposite page) in heating protons have reached top speed.

A FATHER'S FAREWELL

A minister reads last service over a son killed in an icy crevasse

Washington's Mount St. Helens is rated an easy climb and mountaineers annually make hundreds of trips to its 9,671-foot peak. But in the spring melting snows make the slopes treacherous. Last week four University of Washington climbers were descending from the peak. At noon, near a formation called Dog's Head, one of them, Arthur Jessett, plunged through a snow bridge over a crevasse, became wedged against icy walls 75 feet below. His companions prepared to rescue him when, suddenly, came a dreadful realization: the party's 120-foot rope was in Jessett's pack. Jessett begged, "My fingers and toes are getting numb. Hurry!"

One of the climbers went back up the mountain, returned just before dusk with help and a rope. But the line was too short to reach Jessett, who lay groaning with cold. Meanwhile another rescue expedition had gathered at the foot of St. Helens. Jessett's father, Thomas Jessett, vicar of the Florence Henry Memorial Episcopal Chapel of Seattle, left for the mountain.

Early the next day rescuers reached Dog's Head. In the chasm they found Jessett's body resting on his back pack containing the neatly coiled rope. Down the mountain the boy's father waited to conduct brief services (right) and then send two sad messages. One went to his two other children: "Arthur has entered into eternal life. May God be with you." The other to his bishop: "The Lord gave and the Lord has taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord."

"INTO THY HANDS, O merciful Savior," reads the grieving father, "we commend the soul of Thy servant now departed from the body." As Dr. Jusselt stands under towering firs and recites from the Book of Common Prayer (above), weary rescuers bow bare heads or avert stricken faces. Then (below)

Dr. Jusselt kneels over the body on toboggan in morning. "My son, my son," returns away weeping.

APPLAUSE FOR MATT brings a joint session of Congress to its feet as Ridgway, after his address, turns to shake hands with Vice President Alben Barkley.

PENNY AND PRESIDENT ADMIRE NEW OAK LEAF CLUSTER ON MATT'S D.S.M.

MAN ON HIS WAY OVER . . .

Going to SHAPE, Matt wins medal for SCAP job . . .

A general's wife laughed in pride last week at West Point when the President of the United States pinned another decoration on her husband's beribboned chest. At the Military Academy's sesquicentennial President Truman cited General Matthew B. Ridgway for "magnificent personal leadership" of the Korean war and, as Matt's wife Penny watched, conferred a Second Oak Leaf Cluster for his Distinguished Service Medal.

The award was a high point in a flying visit home in which Ridgway reported on his stewardship of SCAP in the Far East and was briefed on his new job as boss of SHAPE in Europe. While Penny shopped (she bought nine pairs of shoes) Ridgway made his reports. Although most Americans agreed with the President's citation, Ridgway acknowledged that he had left the fight against Communism in Asia unfinished. He was pessimistic, seeing no hope of truce, detailing an immense build-up of Red power in the air and on the ground with a fortified belt 15 miles deep across Korea. He said Red germ war propaganda was a warning "as menacing and urgent as a forest fire bearing down on a wooden village." Then he had some top level briefing sessions and was ready to leave for Europe and take over his new job from an old comrade in arms.

UNORTHODOX SALUTE is offered by Ridgway to Navy honor guard while Matt Jr. obediently copies bent wrist and inturned palm, which defy regulations.

MAMIE AND FRANCE'S FIRST LADY SMILE ON IKE'S MEDAILLE MILITAIRE

... MAN ON HIS WAY BACK

... Turning to politics, Ike is honored by France

A general's wife laughed in pride last week in Paris after the premier of France added another to her husband's many decorations. For "the nobility and loftiness of his vision" in planning the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's armed forces, Premier Antoine Pinay conferred on General Dwight D. Eisenhower, while Mamie Eisenhower watched, France's Médaille Militaire.

The award was a high point of Ike's saying goodbye to his soldier's career in Europe. He flew to Holland, lunched with Queen Juliana and lectured Dutch Royal Military Academy cadets on achieving military leadership through discipline, faith and morale. To insure high morale, he revealed, he himself had once learned to cook so that he could give "unshirted hell" to inept military chefs. In France he became an honorary citizen of the village of Louveciennes near SHAPE headquarters and laid a wreath on the Unknown Soldier's tomb. To NATO, for whom he was leaving his job of forging an army unfinished, he read a warning: "Our one trouble is that we are not united." Then, polishing the opening speech of his campaign for the GOP presidential nomination (pp. 75-80), he was nearly ready to pass on his job to an old comrade in arms.

UNORTHODOX POLITICS is displayed by Eisenhower who, carrying Louveciennes citizenship scroll, neglects opportunity to soothe a squalling baby.

CHEERS FOR IKE ring from throats of children on a bannered Dutch street, and the Dutch air force, flying British jets, spells his name in space—with a space

JUMPING INTO THE JUNGLE, parachutists drop toward site of crash, 900 miles north of Rio de Janeiro. All landed safely, but four miles from their target.

CLEARING THE JUNGLE, the jumpers (holding bits of white parachutes) hacked out a landing strip for a helicopter, then made way afoot to the wreckage.

ON THE SCENE AT LAST, officials search through charred wreckage.

SLOGGING THROUGH FOREST, official party was led by Pan American's Herbert Hemple (above). arrived four days after chutists and buried the victims.

CORREA (LEFT), LATER A HOSTAGE, WATCHES PEARLS BEING PUT INTO A BAG

STRANGE TALES FROM THE JUNGLE

Death, diamonds and hostages become tangled in a Brazilian feud

The rumors that came out of Brazil, in whose jungles a Pan American plane with 50 aboard crashed last month, were fantastic—the plane had carried $200,000 in cash, or a fortune in diamonds, or had been blown to bits by a Communist bomb. Then the facts began to come out of the jungle—as fantastic as the rumors.

An official party flown in by the Brazilian government and Pan American landed 35 miles from the crash. While it prepared to hack its way to the wreck, an unofficial party of parachutists was flown in. It had been hired by Adhemar de Barros, ex-governor of São Paulo who wants to be Brazil's next president and seized this chance to prove his enterprise. The parachutists, arriving first on the scene, found scattered wreckage and charred bodies.

Once on the scene the official party found the parachutists getting panicky because the helicopter that was to take them out had broken down. The parachutists seized U.S. inspector Scott Magness and Brazilian Major Miranda Correa as hostages to insure their own evacuation. The government dispatched paratroopers, recalled them when Magness and Correa radioed that they were once more in control. Out of the jungle and all this confusion, however, came no word of any cache of diamonds or cash.

DEMOCRATIC STRATEGY FOR '52

In a campaign year it's a good idea for the independent voter to keep in mind the difference between political issues and political strategy. The issues he can reason about; the strategies he can only try to discern. Republican strategy will depend in large part on who their candidate is. But Truman at least has already decided on the Democratic strategy, and it's a pretty safe bet that any Democratic nominee will use it against any Republican.

"I have been in politics for over 40 years," said Truman to the ADA, "and I know what I'm talking about. . . . One thing I'm sure of: never, never throw away a winning program." By that he meant "the New Deal and the Fair Deal," i.e., economic and verbal favoritism to union labor, farmers and lower income groups.

Examples of this strategy at work could be seen at the steelworkers' convention at Philadelphia. There Vice President Barkley and Labor Secretary Tobin both announced their wholehearted sympathy with the union in its quarrel with the steel companies, Tobin going so far as to admit, "I don't feel any obligation to be impartial . . . I have stood heart and soul and spirit behind the United Steelworkers."

When Averell Harriman launched his candidacy (p. 33), did he make a highminded appeal for national unity in the face of a world crisis, which is supposedly his main concern? Not at all. He tried to outdo his fellow Democrats with a demagogic Fair Deal speech.

But the clincher came last week when Oscar Ewing, the federal security administrator, sounded off before the Boston Chamber of Commerce. Ewing is about as sophisticated a spokesman as the Trumanites have. Said he, "In 1932 the people of America were looking for bread; in 1952 they're looking for a parking place. . . . For every chicken in the pot during the last Republican administration, every worker and businessman can now buy himself three chickens." In short, Oscar is avowedly campaigning against Hoover and the statistics of 1932. "We believe they [working people] should earn enough to be able to buy refrigerators and electric washing machines . . . [and] television sets," said Oscar, thus conjuring up an imaginary opposition to this belief.

The strategy is to equate Republicans with depressions and Democrats with prosperity. How so? Because (says Truman) the Republicans are controlled by a "dinosaur wing" whose "hearts lie with the corporations and not with the working people," or (says Ewing) because they don't understand that "the purchasing power of the masses must be maintained."

This strategy is cut to fit what may well be a new law of Democratic politics—that an incumbent government is never voted out when wages and farm prices are high. Oscar Ewing last winter allowed himself to sympathize with the poor Republicans because they had no issues except "Korea and corruption." With this statement he was widely thought to have put his foot in it. But maybe not. Maybe he can afford to be debonair about Republican strategy if the Democrats stick to the strategy of prosperity and the New Deal.

For what can the Republicans do with this story? They can ridicule it or "me-too" it, but they can't top it. In 1948, as many Republicans now see it, the Democrats even grafted a dangerous little barb on the hook. Blaming the Republican 80th Congress for a shortage of storage bins, the Department of Agriculture towards the end of the campaign refused to use its emergency powers while Midwestern farmers sold grain below support prices. This was advertised as a foretaste of what would happen under a Republican administration. Thus the farmers lost money—a billion dollars, according to Senator Aiken—but the Democrats gained farm votes! A party that can charge farmers money for their votes is pretty solidly identified with prosperity.

In fact, the New Deal may well remain the Bloody Shirt of American politics until an actual Republican administration has proved that it will not repeal it, just as it took Grover Cleveland's election to prove that the Democrats wouldn't secede again.

In view of this Democratic strategy, it would seem that the Republicans' best strategy is to attack on the foreign policy front. The Democrats will of course make an aggressive feint on that front as well. They will try to split the Republicans with defunct labels ("isolationist" vs "internationalist"), while at the same time reviving the 1916 slogan, "he kept us out of war" (the big war, that is). But we call attention to the fact that the big Democratic bet is right where it was in 1948. Down with McKinley, Harding and the dinosaurs! They'll take away your TV set!

HOW TO CONTROL THE BUDGET

There are two chief reasons why our federal budget is so inflated ($85.4 billion). One is obvious; armaments are expensive. The other has been mentioned here before but bears repeating. The budget is so big because many, many more manhours are devoted to building it up than to the task of cutting it down.

However, some judicious manhours have recently been devoted to the cutting problem. A group of economists and business leaders called the American Assembly, meeting under Columbia University auspices, spent most of last week on it. Also Senator Paul Douglas, a close and longtime student of the budget, has published a book called Economy in the National Government. And Douglas and the American Assembly agree as to what Congress must do to get the budget under control.

Before the House blindly voted to slash $4.7 billion off the military budget in April, members rushed frantically around asking for information on this or that budget item. There were nine volumes of committee hearings, but even members of the committee couldn't give their ignorant colleagues any advice. Said one disgusted congressman, "The blind leading the blind!" It was the old story: Congress as now organized has only two tools for its budgetary task: the meat ax and the rubber stamp.

Both Douglas and the American Assembly urge Congress to get itself a large and permanent staff of experts, responsible to the Appropriations Committees but working in the Pentagon while the budget is being prepared. Douglas also thinks the General Accounting Office, which now merely post-audits expenditures, should represent Congress in the budget-making process, thus balancing the experts of the Administration's Bureau of the Budget.

The executive branch of the government has a disease which Douglas calls "administrative elephantiasis." Some think the victim should cure himself and cut waste by new internal controls. But that is like asking each of two million bureaucrats to admit that his job is unnecessary. It is more realistic, and more in line with the Constitution, to hope that a well-staffed and well-briefed Congress can develop a real critical intelligence in budgetary matters. Only thus will the budgetary leviathan ever get a ring in its nose.

Multimillionaire Harriman seeks endorsement as labor's candidate

W. Averell Harriman, multimillionaire New Dealer and presidential candidate, who is sometimes known in Washington as "Honest Ave the hairsplitter," last week made it plain that he now aspires to a new and better title: "Honest Ave the worker's friend."

Beginning his active campaign for the Democratic nomination, Harriman wangled an invitation to address the executive council of the American Federation of Labor meeting in Boston. ("We invited him," said one of them, "because we knew he wanted to come.") He serenaded union leaders with an attack on the Taft-Hartley law and was serenaded in turn by a union band (above). Officially the A.F. of L.

will endorse no candidate until after the convention but President William Green said, "the council took favorably to him."

Moving on to St. Louis, Harriman offered himself for a close examination at the Labor Health Institute and later Local 688, Teamsters' Union, which sponsors the institute, endorsed his candidacy. On top of Washington reports that, after Adlai Stevenson, Harriman was Truman's choice, Harriman's supporters took encouragement from his showing with labor. One of them, Professor Arthur Schlesinger Sr. of Harvard, said, "For the first time in history a multimillionaire will go to the convention with the backing of most of the labor unions."

• New way to get fast pain relief!

Bufferin

TRADE-MARK

Acts twice as fast as aspirin!

Doesn't upset the stomach!

1 Here's why Bufferin does everything aspirin does and does it faster and better!

2 Before any product can relieve pain, the pain-relieving ingredients must get out of the stomach and into the bloodstream.

3 Bufferin, being antacid, opens trap door of the stomach, gets into the bloodstream twice as fast as aspirin.

4 That's why Bufferin relieves your pain twice as fast as aspirin, doesn't upset the stomach!

No tablet or powder can give you relief from pain until the pain-relieving ingredient enters the bloodstream. Bufferin, being antacid, opens the stomach valve speedily, gets into the bloodstream twice as fast as aspirin! Therefore Bufferin acts twice as fast to relieve pain.

And Bufferin won't upset your stomach as aspirin often does, because Bufferin is antacid.

TIME OF ABSORPTION

Clinical studies prove that people who took Bufferin had more pain-relieving ingredient actually in the bloodstream in ten minutes than those people who took aspirin had in twenty minutes. That's why Bufferin acts twice as fast as aspirin to relieve pain.

For headaches, neuralgia, and ordinary muscular aches and pains, remember Bufferin for fast pain relief! Ask your physician or dentist about Bufferin. Get Bufferin from your druggist. Carry the 12-tablet, pocket-size package. Keep the economical 36- or 100-tablet package in your medicine chest. Bufferin is also available in Canada.

PRODUCT OF BRISTOL MYERS

Because Bufferin does not upset the stomach as aspirin often does, many doctors recommend Bufferin for prolonged, as well as occasional, dosage.

Bufferin is scored for easy breaking—particularly for children.

We get a German pact of sorts, Red PWs mock U.N. guards, Britons worry about people living in sin

The Western powers were finally getting a peace treaty with Germany. It was only a treaty of sorts, called a contract, because it applied only to part of Germany. Last week the Big Three foreign ministers—Acheson of the U.S., Eden of Great Britain, Schumann of France—went to Bonn to sign it, with Konrad Adenauer. But a new set of French demands, rushed to Schumann by his cabinet, threatened for a time to gum up proceedings. The peace contract still faced ratification, and the bitter opposition of Social Democrat Leader Kurt Schumacher, who said that anybody who signed such a thing "ceased to be a German."

The railroads are 'denationalized'

Twenty-one months after going into the railroad business, the government got out of it. At the White House, heads of three brotherhoods signed, rather reluctantly, Presidential Assistant John R. Steelman's settlement of the dispute that had been going on for three years. Some 150,000 union members got $100 million in back pay but with wage scales not much different than they would have won anyway. The railroads got a reasonable assurance of no strike before October 1953. The White House, which has enough management worries as a result of the steel seizure, got a sense of relief.

FORT WORTH SHORTS IN EVIDENCE

A lady in Fort Worth asked the city to ban the wearing of shorts, and the resulting display of "old, ugly legs" in public. In protest the Junior Chamber of Commerce took a ballet student before the city council, where she whipped off her skirt and displayed, in shorts, legs neither old nor ugly. The council, embarrassed, decided to do nothing.

RED SENTRIES WATCH U.N. GUARDS

Everything's uncozy on Koje

Outside Koje Island's barbed wire enclosures U.N. combat veterans manned their machine guns and held riot drills. Inside the prisoner compounds the Communists, still gloating over the way their capture of General Dodd had booby-trapped the Americans (LIFE, May 26), held drills in mockery of their guards. Their sentries kept watch from atop their huts; their security squads dragged back some who tried to escape under the wire. Their ranks had just been swelled by 1,100 tough prisoners, transferred from Pusan where they had fomented a riot that killed one PW, injured 85. Meanwhile in Washington the Army broke Generals Dodd and Colson to colonels and reprimanded their superior, Brig. General Paul F. Yount, for not heading off their flubs.

The two of a one-two punch

Taking advantage of a temporary situation of strength, House Republicans chopped $615 million from the $7.9 billion Mutual Security bill, already cut $1 billion. Three score Democrats had been excused in expectation there wouldn't be any important votes; the Republicans suddenly found they had a majority and made the most of it. Next day, passing the bill, the House cut it again, to $6,173,500,000.

Male might assures female rights

The United Nations Commission on Human Rights ran into unexpected opposition when it came to a proposal guaranteeing women an equal share in rights to education, housing, health standards and so on. Women's rights, protested Sweden's Mrs. Agda Rossel, were already protected by a ban on discrimination on account of sex, and by making a special case of women they implied "silent recognition" that women are a different species and should be given this right "out of charity." Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, for the U.S., and Mrs. Hansa Mehta, for India, agreed. But the male majority pushed the proposed covenant article through.

The queen asks for a raise

Queen Elizabeth II asked the House of Commons to kindly figure out a new scale of annual allowances for herself and her family which, as royal families go, lives pretty prudently. On her late father's Civil List, which ran to a modest $1.6 million, she was down for $112,000 a year as heiress presumptive; now, as queen, she probably will get a raise. Elizabeth also asked Parliament to start thinking about providing more money for Princess Margaret (who now gets $16,800) "in the event of her marrying" and for "any future wife" of Prince Charles, now 3 years old. She also suggested a sort of cost-of-living increase for her husband, the Duke of Edinburgh, who now gets $28,000. (Prince Albert, consort of Queen Victoria, got almost 10 times that much.) No matter what it does, Parliament cannot lose, for the crown lands whose income George III renounced 192 years ago bring the treasury almost $6 million a year.

MOURNER CRASHES LINE AT GARFIELD'S BIER

A distraught John Garfield is dead

The problems of Jules Garfinkle, a tough brat on the sidewalks of New York, were not all solved when he became John Garfield, a tough guy of stage and screen. He had troubles with directors, with the press with Communist groups which, he said, had duped him, and with a bad heart. A year ago he had testified before a congressional committee about his attempted capture by the leftists, and he faced another appearance to make further explanations. Last week, worried about this and over family troubles, he stayed up all night playing cards, spent all day without sleep and then went that night, tired and distraught, to the apartment of an actress friend. Next morning John Garfield, 39, was found dead of the heart attack his doctor had warned he would suffer if he didn't take care of himself. He did not die friendless; the mob scene at his services was likened to, but did not equal, that at Rudolph Valentino's.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service had some dismaying news for the thousands of hunters who cross the border to stalk game from New Brunswick to British Columbia. Because of the foot-and-mouth disease among Canadian cattle, no cloven-hoofed animal the hunters shoot—meaning moose, deer, caribou, mountain goat and sheep, and antelope—can be brought back. A concession without comfort: they can bring back their moose, or other kill, if they cook it and have it inspected before crossing the border.

The divorce problem, at home and abroad

Lifting the eyebrows of a British royal commission on marriage and divorce, Mrs. Eirene White, a Scottish Laborite M.P., told the commission that 125,000 couples (a figure she based on guesswork, not on a census) are living in sin because of the country's tough divorce laws. She suggested that seven-year separation, as well as the present grounds of cruelty, adultery and desertion, be recognized by the British courts. In the U.S. last week several incidents showed to what lengths American courts will go to spare people from having to live in sin. Dolores Costello Barrymore's daughter got a divorce after testifying that her rarely employed husband, Thomas A. Fairbanks, took the position that "work is only for peasants." Franchot Tone got one on several grounds, one being that Barbara Payton boasted of her cooking, but didn't think about dinner until the guests arrived. And a man in Indianapolis got one because a year ago, while he slept, he was doused with a teakettle of hot water by his wife, who hasn't been seen since.

HITLER'S WALLS COME TUMBLING DOWN AND DEBRIS HURTTLES AS 220 POUNDS OF DYNAMITE EXPLODE. SALVAGED BEAMS AND FURNACES LIE SAFE OUTSIDE

BLOWUP AT BERCHTESGADEN

Hitler's mountain mansion is blasted, but Eagle's Nest is saved

For more than six years U.S. and German authorities have wondered what to do about Adolf Hitler's grandiose lair above Berchtesgaden in the Bavarian Alps, where the Führer had built himself a mansion, the Berghof, and a private eyrie, the Eagle's Nest, on a nearby peak. In April 1945 a bombing raid gutted the Berghof, and after the war its bones were picked by souvenir hunters. This spring all that remained intact was the Eagle's Nest.

In the Bavarian cabinet the question was whether the stronghold and its ghosts should be preserved as a grim reminder of the futility of Hitlerism or destroyed lest neo-Nazis make it a shrine. When it was learned that guides were lecturing tourists on the glories of Nazism and selling them Hitler's bathroom tiles at $1 each, a compromise was reached. The Eagle's Nest was to be saved and used as a restaurant and anti-Nazi monument because, as one U.S. official ponderously observed, "A man who would build such a sumptuous installation for himself when his people were in great need must have been capable of the greatest social irresponsibility." The ruined Berghof was sold to a German demolition firm, which paid $7,143 for salvage rights and agreed not to sell anything as souvenirs. After removing usable materials—steel beams, furnaces and other equipment—the salvagers blew Hitler's house to smithereens.

EAGLE'S NEST, on peak higher and to the left of dynamited house (in picture at top), stays intact.

THE FALL OF THE HOUSE OF HITLER

HITLER'S ERA AND END were shared by the Berghof. Here, resting from the war in 1944, Hitler brooded over his estate. One year later the Führer was dead, and six-ton bombs in a 350-plane British raid had gutted the structure.

THE BERGHOF, whitewashed and flag-decked, flaunted the Nazi swastika in 1937. But a direct bomb hit, fire and years of looting by GIs and tourists left only this blackened ruin where curious sightseers prowled Hitler's balcony.

HOUSE GUESTS in 1937 were bride and groom when Duke of Windsor was in Germany studying labor. Uninvited postwar guests roamed about, hunting souvenirs, undaunted by signs saying weakened shell was dangerous to enter.

THE VIEW through this 10- by 25-foot picture window framed the Bavarian mountains and furnished a majestic backdrop for this conference chamber with its long table and vase of roses. Long afterward only the view remained.

Soapmaker's washable building is world's glassiest

A brand new sight in Manhattan these days, which makes cab drivers slow up and pedestrians reduce speed to a trot, is the $6 million office building just completed on Park Avenue at 53rd Street for Lever Brothers Company, makers of soap, tooth toiletries and cosmetics. A sparkling tower of glass with its steel skeleton plainly revealed, Lever House, designed by Skidmore Owings and Merrill, is raised on slim steel columns and seems to float in the air while mirroring the more conventional buildings around it.

The ground floor of the structure consists almost entirely of a garden and covered walks for promenaders. The next floor covers the whole site but has a rectangular hollow in the center that overlooks the park. Employees, 80% of whom are female, sit by the outer windows and try not to notice the whistling, waving pedestrians below them. Topping this second floor are gardens, behind which a tower rises for 22 stories. The building is covered with a thin glass skin which does not obscure the structure's steel columns. For its size it is the glassiest office building in the world. The tower is set back so that, unlike many in New York, it can be seen in entirety from the street. The building is sealed and air-conditioned and, with few exceptions, has no windows that open. This keeps dirt out, makes the offices exceptionally clean. To keep the exterior immaculate a machine is lowered from the roof and the stainless steel and glass walls are scoured from top to bottom twice a month with Lever Brothers' detergent.

WINDOW WASHING the outside of Lever building was complicated by fact that windows do not open. Solution was gondola suspended from car which runs on tracks around roof. Washers move gondola up and down by push buttons.

TWO SCRUBBERS are kept busy washing Lever House, whose glass area is the equivalent of about 5,000 windows.

Twice a month it takes six days and about 22 pounds of detergent (Surf) to clean the entire outside of the building.

Revolt of an Angel . . .

Vittorio Manunta is a 10-year-old Italian movie star and war orphan from the town of Assisi who is being introduced to American audiences as an angelic urchin in Never Take No for an Answer (p. 58). A few weeks ago Vittorio visited the U.S. to help advertise his film, and was roped into a high-powered publicity campaign that would have flattened most adults. In three weeks Vittorio met the mayors of New York and Philadelphia, appeared on 10 TV shows and 12 radio broadcasts, gave interviews to 17 newspapermen and six magazine editors, made five appearances at theaters and benefits. When LIFE interviewed Vittorio his friendliness had been somewhat frayed and he was, understandably, in a state of justifiable revolt—which is recorded with all sympathy for Vittorio on the following pages.

VARIABLE VITTORIO snarls at the cameraman, then changes (below) to his normally friendly mood.

Tan gloriously

Swim suit by Cetina

Skol won't dry your skin. Skol contains two exclusive patented ingredients that let you tan gloriously.

Now—a marvelous new formula! It helps you tan beautifully — radiantly the very first weekend — without painful burning!

The New Skol formula is precision-balanced, acts as a screen-filter between you and the sun. It "shutters out" the dangerous skin-searing rays to protect your skin from painful, disfiguring sunburn.

At the same time, this amazing tanning formula "filters in" just enough of the ultra-violet rays to let you tan beautifully . . . gloriously!

And, of course, Skol lets you tan in languorous comfort. There's no oily film to pick up sand, no unpleasant "stickiness" to your skin. Get a lovelier tan this weekend—get Skol today. Available in plastic bottles.

TO BAIT THE CAMERAMAN, VITTORIO CUTS UP AS LADY BERKELEY BEAMS

'I hate you...'

LIFE's movie editor and Photographer Alfred Eisenstaedt called for Vittorio at a Park Avenue hotel. With the boy were his foster mother and two press agents. They rode up to Central Park in a taxi. The ride was crowded but uneventful despite Vittorio's repeated cries to the driver, "Fly like a bird, fly like a bird."

The taxi stopped near a lake, and Vittorio was off. The press agents pursued him, and after them hobbled Lady Berkeley, who suffers from arthritis and also had a toothache. He evaded them all but after 10 minutes came back. . . .

. . . "I can beat you up," he said.

"Stand over on that rock," said Eisenstaedt. Vittorio did so. "Look pleasant for the camera." "Let me see the camera," said the angel, grabbing for it. "No, it doesn't belong to me. Just stand there and look gentle," said Eisenstaedt.

Vittorio made an assortment of faces.

"I have been to Assisi," said Eisenstaedt. "Isn't it a pretty town?" "I loathe it," said Vittorio. "Why?" "Because it's dead."

Eisenstaedt's next question was interrupted by Vittorio, who then jumped on the photographer and knocked him against the nearest press agent, who fell to his knees. But Eisenstaedt still stood upright and Vittorio bit him in the left wrist. "You promised to be good," said Lady Berkeley, as she left to go back to the dentist. . . .

... "I hate you," said Vittorio, baring his teeth. "Now young man," said Eisenstaedt, "just stand still and let me take pictures of you."

"You hate me and I hate you," said Vittorio.

"I want to take a nice picture of you."

"I don't care," said Vittorio. But just then he spied a tiny boy who was climbing over the rocks behind him, well in camera range. . . .

... "Get out of here," shouted Vittorio, running up to the infant and pointing savagely. One press agent got in just in time to stop him, while another headed off the outraged parents of the tiny boy. They were easily pacified when it turned out they had seen Vittorio on a television program. "It just shows you what the movie business has come to," said the press agent wearily.

Vittorio ran down to the lake again. He became mollified. "I want to make the peace," he said.

"Well, just stand there for a minute," said Eisenstaedt.

He pranced about on the rock.

"I am strong. I am tough." He flexed his muscles.

"Be nice," said a press agent. Vittorio ignored him and changed the subject. "When-a de American soldiers they come to Italy . . .

... "They all look-a de girls," Vittorio said, smiling coyly.

"I bet you can't climb that tree," said Eisenstaedt.

"You're a liar," said Vittorio.

"I bet you can't."

He ran at it, but sure enough he couldn't. "When he goes to an American school," said one of the press agents, "he'll calm down."

"I hate you," shouted Vittorio from a distance. He was at length corralled and persuaded to make the peace again. He came up with his hair over his eyes. But on the way he met three little boys playing cowboy and attracted them with loud cries.

"I am not going to Hollywood," he said.

"Hollywood has nothing to teach him," said the photographer.

Peppino saves a donkey

In his movie, which has English dialog, young Vittorio acts—and acts excellently—the part of Peppino, an orphan boy like himself living in Assisi, where St. Francis, friend of all animals, had lived. When Peppino's beloved donkey falls sick he tries in vain to take her to the crypt of St. Francis to be cured. Finally he takes his plea to the Pope in Rome.

COMFORTING VIOLETTA, his ailing donkey. Peppino decides he needs more than mere medicine to cure his pet, who helps him by hauling firewood.

CONFRONTING VATICAN GUARDS, persistent Peppino demands to see the Pope on Violetta's behalf. But the Swiss guards temporarily rebuff him.

GOING TO THE SHRINE with a letter of permission from the Pope, Peppino leads Violetta to St. Francis' crypt, after which their woes will be over.

THE AIRPORT PROBLEM is dramatized in this aerial view of the Chicago area. The flight paths shown are only the tip of the iceberg. Lines extending from runway ends show areas of noise and air pollution. The air which now lingers heavily can be reduced to two zones (wings) only by using dominant parallel runways.

AIRPORT REMEDY

Doolittle commission finds a way to protect people and save fields

After the third airplane crash in Elizabeth, N.J., last February, President Truman appointed a commission to study problems of airport safety. A fortnight ago the commission, headed by Lieut. General James H. Doolittle (left), handed in its report.

The commission found that potential danger—people on the ground—is concentrated almost entirely in the areas at the end of airport runways (next page). To minimize this hazard it was recommended that existing airports gradually concentrate their traffic on one or two parallel runways as shown above. The commission urged that new airports be built on the single or parallel runway pattern (right) incorporating cleared areas a half-mile long and 1,000 feet wide at the end of each runway, with two-mile-long approaches beyond these extensions, zoned to keep out any concentrations of people.

AIRPORT OF FUTURE is shown in this artist's drawing. It is located so that fan-shaped flight approaches will be over relatively clear areas. The terminal and hangar facilities are between runways.

Design is predicated on ability of the most modern commercial air craft to disregard all but strongest crosswinds. Until this is true of all planes, a short right-angle runway (dotted lines) may be needed.

"My heart leaps up when I behold...my Bill!"

BILL and I went along like a breeze for ten beautiful years. Three kids, good luck . . . and the future stretching out like diamonds on a dewy morning.

Then, in a matter of months, we slipped. Bill was taken off the road and put inside. A promotion, so they said; but it didn't work that way. He'd come home, night after night, all frazzled, shot.

"Meetings," he'd say . . . "conferences, people, noise, confusion I can't take it inside, Grace; I just don't seem to get the score."

That's when I put on my thinking cap. Bill's always been a little hard-of-hearing. He was OK in a conversation with one person; but put him in a crowd and the voices came too thick and fast, and from too many places at once. (Most hard-of-hearing people are that way.)

"Bill," I said, "If you're going to hold that inside job, you've simply got to hear . . . perfectly, clearly, every word and every inflection. What you need is a hearing aid."

"Who, me?" he answered. "Why, Grace, I'm only 33."

"So what!" I said. "There are thousands of men under 33, and women too, who need hearing-aids and who are smart enough to wear them. Would anybody think you were smart to go without glasses if you had a squint? Same with hearing-aids. They're in the same class . . . exactly. Think it over!"

Bill did! He bought a hearing-aid that weighs a few ounces. Size of a cigarette package, and fits in his shirt pocket.

Now Bill can hear . . . inside, outside, wherever he is. He's back on the team and going strong.

The poet Wordsworth said, "My heart leaps up when I behold a rainbow in the sky." It's like that with me—but I don't need any rainbow. My heart leaps up when I behold . . . my Bill!

P.S. Bill uses "Eveready" batteries, of course. They last a good deal longer.

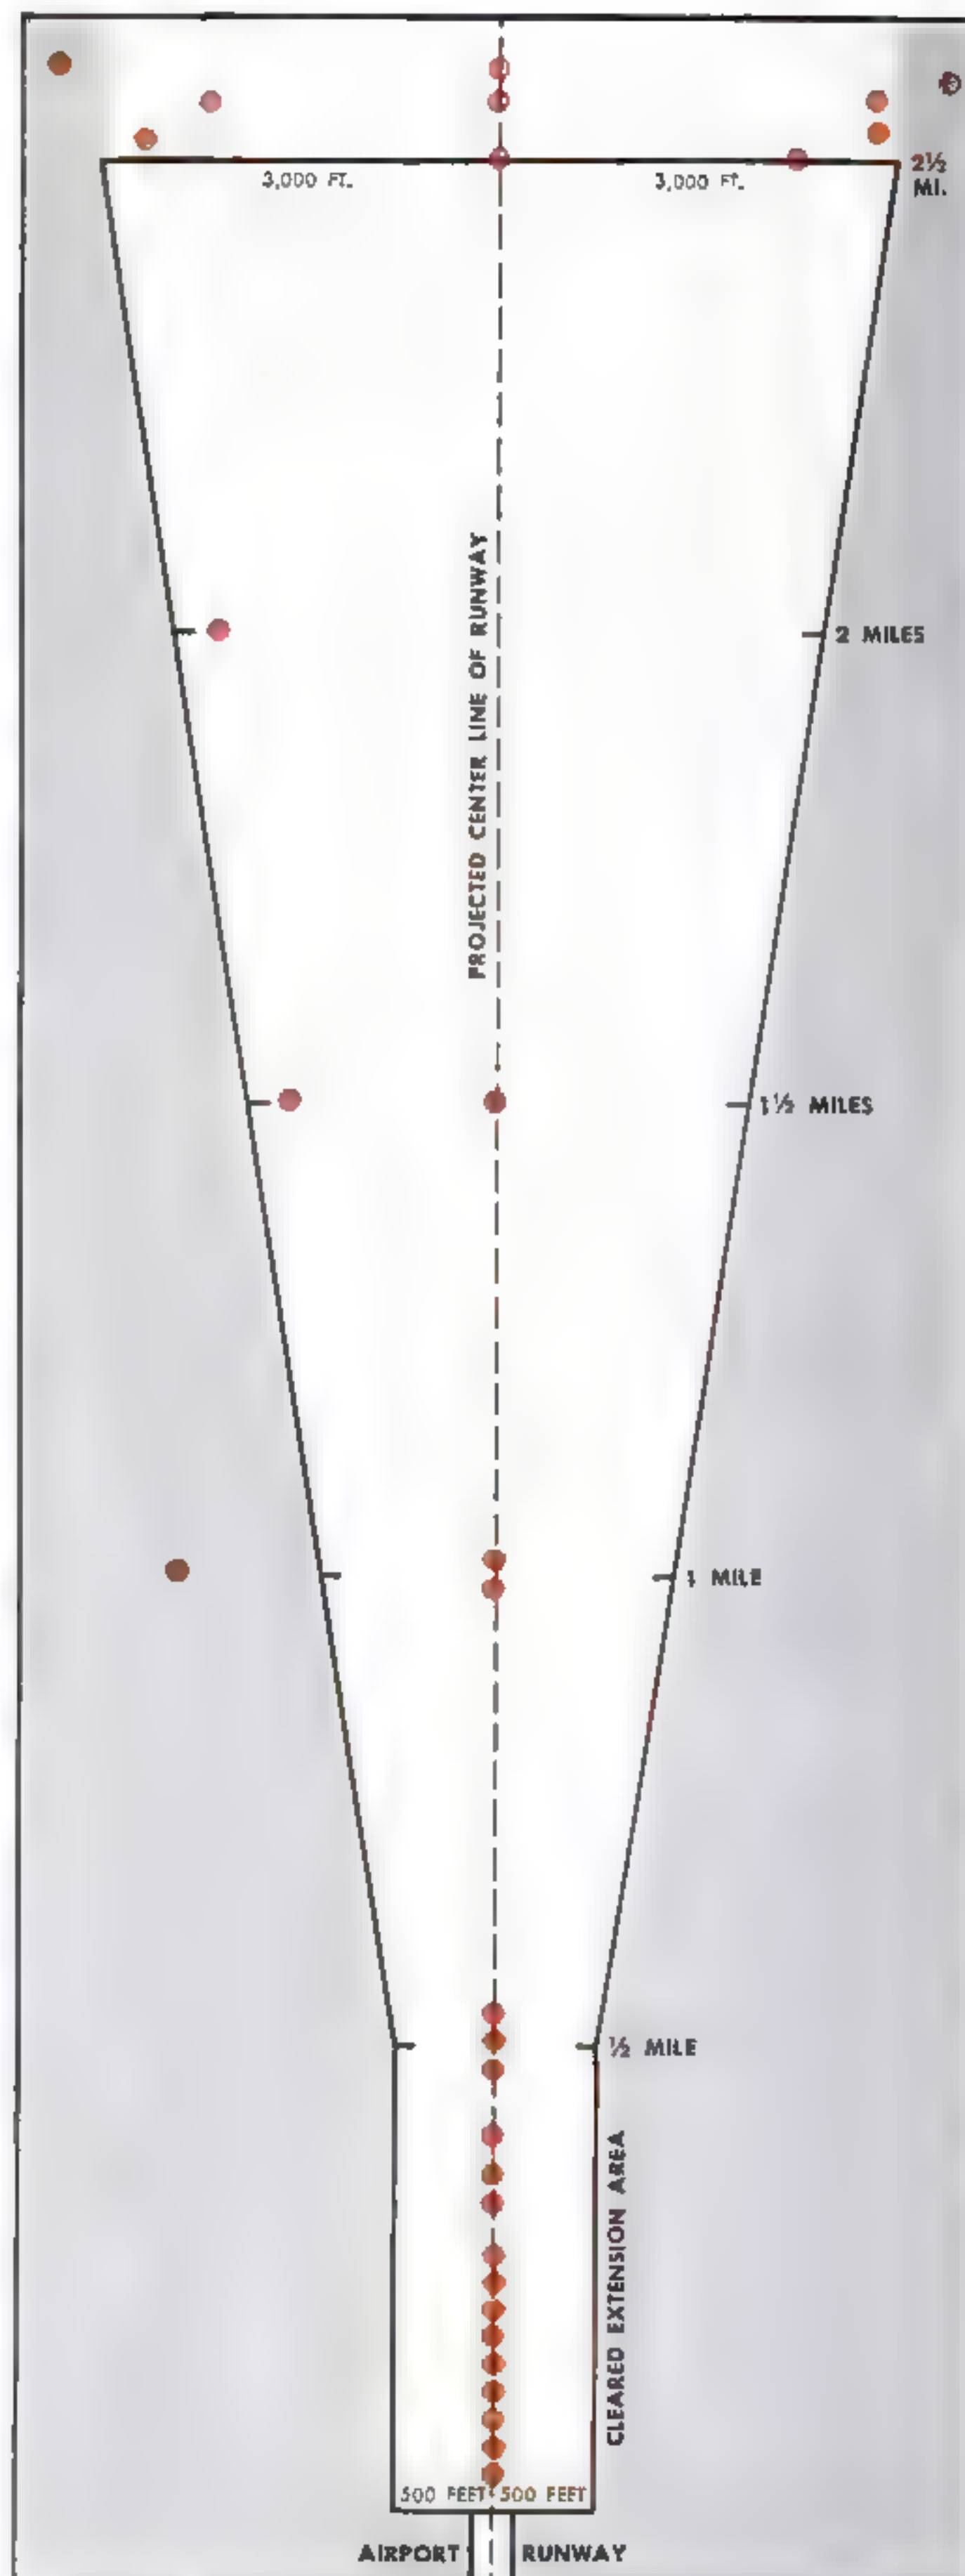

This letter reflects the experiences of many thousands of progressive young men and young women. If you are hard of hearing, see a hearing-aid dealer today. You will find him a trained and ethical specialist, anxious and able to help you.

Airport Remedy CONTINUED

TO CHART HAZARD ZONE commission experts plotted locations of the 31 commercial or military crashes that resulted in injury or death to persons on the ground near airports in the period 1946-52. All but three occurred within 3,000 feet of a line projected out from the center of the runway, and 22 (among them the three Elizabeth crashes) fell within the fan-shaped area diagrammed above and used on the preceding page to define the runway approach zones. Since the greatest concentration of accidents was in the first half mile, the commission recommended that that area be made an integral part of new airports.

JOLTS AHEAD!

If your tires are damaged your LEE ROAD HAZARD GUARANTY pays the bill!

Bumpity bump! Thumpity thump! First a rock, then a rut, and then a sizable hunk of fallen tree. Getting to that vacation spot—no matter how carefully you drive—may be mighty tough on tires. One sharp rock that you failed to miss can do a lot of harm.

What's the answer? Give up vacations? Stay off the "old ox trails," stick to the well-paved roads? No! Just drive on tires made by Lee.

For your Lee Super DeLuxe Tires are protected by the Lee Road Hazard Guaranty. It is a double guaranty. Covers defects in workmanship and materials for life; covers road hazard damage of any kind for fifteen months.

Rim cuts, bruises, impact breaks, blowouts, injuries caused by faulty brakes or alignment, under-inflation or overload—your Lee Guaranty includes them all.

Only an unusual tire could rate this double guaranty. Only a very confident manufacturer could safely make it. You owe it to your peace of mind to ride on tires good enough to be double-guaranteed.

Next time you're in the market for a tire, go to your Lee dealer. He is one of more than 19,000 Lee dealers in the United States ready to put Lee Tires on your car and new confidence in your heart. See him soon; let him tell you why Lee Tires give you

NEW O'HARE AIRPORT, now under construction near Chicago, needs 6,672 acres for its six tangential runways. Even this vast plot does not provide recommended cleared runway extensions (dotted lines). In event of build-up around airport, it would be necessary to zone approach areas in six directions.

SOME PROPOSALS FOR PLANNERS

Although the President's commission was primarily concerned with questions of safety, the recommended single or parallel runway pattern also is attractive from a standpoint of airport financing and city planning. Even when supplemented by a second-direction runway for wind emergencies, it occupies only two-thirds of the acreage of a three-runway, multidirectional airport, and far less land than is required by a tangential design (above). Since its hazard and nuisance zones are limited, the single- or parallel-runway airport can be located close to the metropolitan area it serves. The commission emphasized that, although existing airports should try to convert to parallel operation, they should on no account be closed. In the most heavily built-up areas, the incidence of hazard actually is still slight—more people are killed by bicycles than falling aircraft. Asked to comment on the airport that started the inquiry, Jimmy Doolittle declared, "Newark is safe."

From experience comes faith

How much do you love your dog, little man? How much does he love you?

As much as you can squeeze him! As much as he can wag his tail! How simple it is, in our young lives, to measure friendship.

We find it harder later on . . . but we learn. Experience teaches us that glib expressions of affection do not always mean that sincerity dwells deep down.

We learn to listen to the heart instead of the lips...to consider the deed instead of the boast. These become the measures of our faith.

Farm Ponds

WATER FOR DROUGHT AND FOOD AND FUN

During the past year about 115,000 farm ponds were dug in the U.S., half of them with subsidies from the federal and state governments. This brings to over a million the number of man-made ponds on American farms, most of them built in the past 20 years. They provide farmers with a year-round supply of water for cattle and irrigating fields.

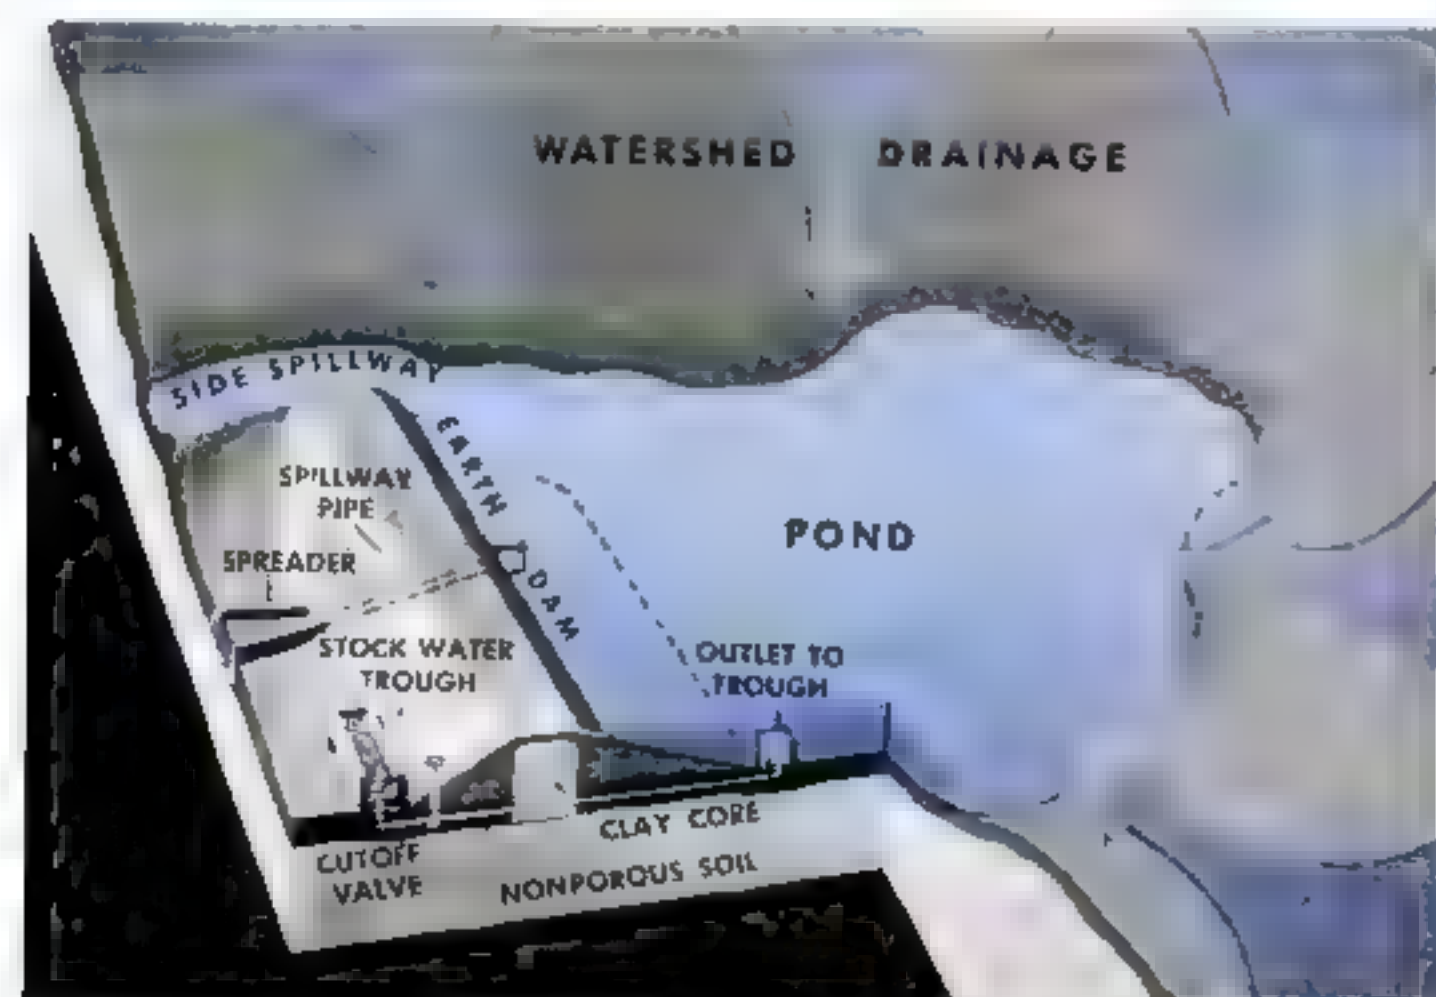

This year 40 states have been granted federal funds to help farmers pay for the cost of the ponds. The average small farm pond (see diagrams, below) can be dug for as little as $450. The usual subsidy to qualifying farmers is 35% to 40% of the pond's cost.

Consultation with the local county agent or Department of Agriculture representative is advisable in choosing a site. The watershed above the pond should be between 10 and 30 acres—large enough to keep water in the pond during dry periods but not so large as to flood the pond during heavy rains. The best watershed is one covered with grass, trees or shrubs. Before the pond is dug, tests of the soil must be made to find out if the subsoil has enough clay to hold water. Rock or shale ledges, sand, gravel or peat subsoil are too porous. Ponds should be at least six feet deep and no less than one quarter acre in area.

In addition to its usefulness as a water supply for crops and livestock, the farm pond brings a number of incidental pleasures to the farm. It attracts birds and wildlife, gives the family a chance to swim and in cold sections to ice-skate. For about $25 it can be stocked with enough baby fish to provide sport for family fishermen and net food—200 pounds of bass and bluegills per acre of pond—for the family table.

ENJOYING THE POND on the Hinkle farm in Bucks County, Pa., Stevie Hinkle and his dog soak themselves. Woodrow Wehrung, who built pond, has dug 75 of them in that vicinity in past three years.

FARM POND LAYOUT recommended by U.S. government is given in bird's-eye view diagram which shows bulldozed excavation, watershed, properly constructed earthen dam and two outlets. Special pipe (foreground) carries water to a trough for the cattle. Pond remains clean if cattle drink from separate trough.

CROSS SECTION OF POND shows nonporous clay subsoil required to hold water. If clay must be imported, price of pond rises. Top of dam is higher than pipe spillway and higher than side spillway which is built to carry off sudden downpours, spring thaws. If water is allowed to flow over dam, it could be damaged.

FINISHING A POND the bulldozer wheel along harrowed and fertilized banks. Grass cover helps prevent soil erosion, keep water clean. This spring led pond is not completely full. Water will rise to the top of the run-off pipe at lower right. Covering one-quarter acre, pond is especially cheap, cost $1,100 to build.

PLEASURE POND of three acres fed by spring makes swimming and fishing possible. It cost $1,750, has increased value of property and pays its way in fun.

LIVESTOCK POND, fed by run-off from surrounding fields, cost $575, is used for cattle, ducks and to attract wild birds. The water runs to a trough for animals.

BUDGET POND for small dairy farm cost only $360, saves farmer from hauling water for cows during dry spells, gives him extra supply of water to irrigate crops.

IN PARIS THE GENERAL TAKES A THOUGHTFUL MINUTE BEFORE ANSWERING A REPORTER ON EUROPEAN DEFENSE

QUESTION: WHAT IS IKE LIKE?

Here are some clues to the attitudes and intentions of the general who returns to U.S. this week

by ROBERT T. ELSON

ON the eve of his dramatic plunge into the icy and angry sea of U.S. politics—what is Ike like?

How have Ike's intentions and attitudes toward politics and the presidency changed while his friends waged the campaign for his nomination?

Is he a stubborn sphinx—a candidate unwilling or afraid to express his views on current issues? Or an oracle with all of the right answers neatly tagged and filed for use at the right moment?

How is the man's health?

What are his greatest current assets? His liabilities?

To learn the answers to these questions I flew to Paris a fortnight ago. There I talked to members of Ike's personal staff, to the general himself, to many of the foreign diplomats who have worked with him for a long period of time. I then followed the general on his farewell tour of the armies in Germany. This is no exclusive interview, for the general has consistently refused to talk for publication to individuals. It is merely a report on how Ike looks and seems to think as the final and critical phase of the campaign for the Republican nomination begins.

WHAT IS IKE LIKE?

In three phrases—very warm, very friendly and very commanding. The general's now familiar broad smile, his friendly wave of the hand and his nickname "Ike" are perhaps somewhat misleading. Because he is one of the most photographed men alive, Ike even on first meeting seems familiar. But this fact does not necessarily make for familiarity. His staff calls him "the old man," "the chief" and sometimes "Ike"; his friends may address him as "Ike" across the bridge table or over a casual drink. But it certainly would not occur to even a presumptuous visitor to be that casual on first meeting. He commands a respect that is established not merely by uniform or position but by presence and personality. His habit, however, is to put the newcomer almost instantly at ease by taking the initiative in conversation. This he does so skillfully that the most reticent quickly find themselves relaxing. He communicates such intense interest in the words of his visitors that many leave his presence happily positive that they have dominated the interview—only to realize considerably later that the opposite was true. This ability to give the appearance of sustained and sympathetic interest is the secret of Ike's success in handling with so few words so many different personalities with so much effectiveness. As for handling groups, his diplomatic friends remark on his singular gift for sensing the sore point, the ruffled psyche, and for deftly moving in to soothe and heal the hurt.

For a man so long in a post of command Ike has preserved to remarkable degree the rare ability to listen. Certainly he has listened to a prodigious amount of unsolicited political advice in the last four months. But he makes up his own mind. If any persons believe that when Eisenhower returns he will be the obliging agent, instrument or creature of any group or groups, he faces swift disenchantment. Even the people now running his campaign may be surprised, for Ike certainly will be the man in command. Already he has shown his self-sufficiency in this respect. In January and February when the Taft bandwagon seemed rolling, Ike refused to heed the desperate counsel from well-meaning friends that he resign his commission and battle Taft in person. Ike, in short, can be persuaded to change his opinion and policy on presentation of persuasive evidence—but he is not easily influenced by mere exhortation.

HOW HAVE IKE'S INTENTIONS AND ATTITUDES TOWARD POLITICS CHANGED SINCE THE CAMPAIGN FOR HIS NOMINATION BEGAN?

The simple, unsurprising answer is: scarcely at all. On Jan. 7 he said that he was a Republican, that he would answer only "a clear-cut call to duty," and that he would not participate in the pre-convention activities of those who sought to nominate him. He has never swerved from this course of action; he has resisted every effort to induce him to do so. The results of the primaries and the tremendous write-in votes have naturally made a marked impression on Ike, but he has never taken a step to bring these results about.

Ike's opponents cannot be expected to accept this fact, and the cynical sophisticates of politics will continue to scoff. But the general makes a sharp distinction between making known his views on key issues or frankly talking with delegates anxious to meet him and the usual practice of aggressively asking people for their votes. Ike will not go hunting such votes on his return. In fact his campaign will not be very orthodox politically; he will probably make at most three speeches (plans for only the one at Abilene on June 4 have been completed). But these should leave no doubts but that he will speak frankly on current issues. All his off-the-record remarks on political attitudes and intentions correspond faithfully with what he has said on the record.

"No matter what happens," Ike has told visitor after visitor, "I am determined to be honest with myself about this thing. I have been honest in saying I would take no direct part in politics from this office. When I return I am not going to stomp the country in advance of the convention." Ike's stand has been governed by another sound consideration: an anxiety to reduce the growing bitterness of the Republican campaign for the nomination. As William Randolph Hearst Jr., publisher of the New York Journal-American, reported after talking with Ike: "[the general] understands the key role of Senator Taft in Congress and the fact that he would have to work closely with the Ohio senator should he, General Eisenhower, be elected. . . . He has been embarrassed by some of the excesses of certain supporters who in their anxiety to elect General Eisenhower have concentrated on maligning Senator Taft. . . ."

After the convention, all this will be different. If nominated the general intends to pursue a vigorous campaign. This he promised specifically in a letter released by Colonel Franklin D'Olier of New Jersey. "If by any chance," he wrote, "it should come about that the Republican party does name me as its standard bearer, I am determined to lead the entire organization into a fight in which there will be no cessation, no rest and no lack of intensity until the final decision is made."

The "no politics" rule at Ike's Paris headquarters has been a matter not only of principle but also of plain practical necessity for a military office. SHAPE's political sensitivity has grown with every Eisenhower victory in the primaries. As the probability of Ike's nomination has become more and more likely the situation has made for strange embarrassments. One British colonel who answered a U.S. newspaper's request for Ike's voting record (quite properly replying that this was a personal matter) found himself in trouble with a congressman. The congressman wanted to know by what right a British Public Information Officer was answering an American general's mail—ignoring the fact that SHAPE is an international headquarters where only 150 out of 320 officers are American. Then there was the visiting country editor who announced he was a Taft delegate back home. "What I want to know," he demanded, "is when the general is nominated, is he going to purge people like me?" It was no wonder that after harassment of this kind a tired and bewildered officer once shouted into the phone, "No! No, I tell you this isn't a military headquarters, it is a political headquarters."

Is IKE A SPHINX? OR AN OMNISCIENT ORACLE?
The only real mystery about Ike's views is why so many people have taken so little trouble to read what he has said. The record of his opinions is remarkably detailed, particularly on foreign policy. On this major issue it is, in some respects, more complete than that of his chief opponent, Taft.

Briefly summarized, here are some opinions which he has freely stated for the record:

Europe must unite or perish.
The U.S. cannot carry all the load in Europe.
Eventually the Europeans must supply most of the ground forces to defend the Continent.

Europeans should extend their conscription to at least two years in order to meet the burden of European defense.

Indo-China, Malaya and Korea are as direct and essential as Europe to the defense of the free world against Communism.

Congress should vote substantial foreign aid, although such aid may be subjected to limited reductions. (Here Eisenhower and Taft are directly opposed and a clear choice is offered to the Republican delegates at the convention.)

All of these are substantial statements of opinion on foreign policy from a man who may be the next President of the U.S.

He has also spoken out on these domestic issues:

He believes that the oil in tidelands should belong to the states.

He believes that substantial flood control should be undertaken on the Missouri River but that so far as possible the responsibility for this remains with the states concerned. He has been consistently against over-centralization in Washington.

He is against federal aid to education.

He believes economic stability is essential to our own security.

He is against excessive taxation, which he regards as a form of confiscation.

He is against the socialization of medicine and for a sound public health program.

He believes a national farm policy should take some of the risks out of growing the nation's food.

Eisenhower is, obviously, not a man without opinions; but neither is he a man who will form opinions briskly or proclaim them breezily. Lifetime training, particularly on the general staff, has conditioned him to make up his mind only after getting thorough detailed data on any given subject—including scrutiny of all alternative courses of action. He carries this practice over when he forms private opinions on civilian matters. He is constantly astounded when people apparently expect instant, categorical answers to complex questions. One businessman wanted to know what bank rediscount rate he favored. So Ike lamented to his staff, "That is like asking the supreme commander to recommend the caliber of a particular weapon without first consulting his ordnance expert."

Of Ike's speeches a Columbia trustee once said he "emphasizes the obvious rather than elucidates the obscure." The general would hardly deny that. He is inclined to feel that the obvious, so often being the fundamental, is precisely what ought to be talked about.

In domestic politics the general is a conservative, perhaps no less so than Bob Taft. His views on freedom, free enterprise and opportunity are what some liberals would call old-fashioned and Algeresque. "Whenever I think of freedom, I think of my mother," he is fond of saying. "I know that we were very poor in Abilene, but we never felt poor. That's the glory of America. I sold vegetables to people in the other part of town and never felt this was an imposition or a handicap. I never once heard my mother complain or talk about how poor we were. Always she talked about the opportunities open to us. The opportunities were there. Those of us who wanted to go to college did go to college. All of my brothers did well."

HOW IS THE GENERAL'S HEALTH?

His recent brief bout with a strep throat gave currency to some scurrilous stories spread by his enemies. But Ike bounced back from this four-day illness so fast that he had resumed an exhausting round of diplomatic farewells 24 hours after being discharged from sick bay. Major General Howard Snyder, senior physician at SHAPE, says, "His is a case that requires little or none of my attention. Despite the last 15 months of tremendous concentration he hasn't varied a pound and his blood pressure is unchanged." To the casual observer Ike is a man who seems to improve under activity. At Brussels when he arrived for an exhausting tour of inspection he looked a little tired on leaving his plane. But at the end of a day in which he had made seven diplomatic calls and reviewed two bodies of troops, he appeared at a press conference fresh, relaxed, almost gay. After three exhausting days of reviewing the troops at Minden, Coblenz and Frankfurt there was hardly a line of fatigue on his face. The general has established a life-long habit of looking after himself. He works hard but he seldom takes work home with him. Even with the exacting schedule at SHAPE he has kept to a strict separation between work and home. At home he has severely limited his social life to a few intimates and attendance at such formal occasions as his position demanded. It is typical of the man that even under the greatest strain he has somehow managed to take a balanced view of work and relaxation. He certainly gives no evidence of strain or tension when you meet him face to face.

WHAT ARE IKE'S CURRENT LIABILITIES?

In Europe correspondents feel that neither the general nor his staff has sufficiently anticipated the rough-and-tumble welcome awaiting him on his return. In Paris there is much speculation on what will happen when Ike emerges from what they call "the protective cocoon." By this they refer to Ike's own personal staff, a closely knit, efficient team within the larger team of SHAPE itself. They go to great lengths to spare him trouble and detail. "The old man can operate on his own," says one of them, "only it is a great waste of a very great talent to let a guy like that take in his own laundry." It will be hard to replace such a staff with civilians equally devoted and equally sensitive to his needs, methods and moods.

Overseas the aim of his staff has been to insulate and protect him from unnecessary interference so that he could concentrate on the main business in hand—the development of European defense. Over here the civilian staff will have just the opposite function—that of making Eisenhower available to all who wish to see him. Fortunately their task may be somewhat easier than that of the military staff because Ike enjoys meeting people. But the transition from supreme commander to candidate will be difficult.

WHAT IS HIS CHIEF IMMEDIATE ASSET?

It is undoubtedly the freshness and freedom with which he can speak on any subject. So far he has been truly, in spirit and mind, outside of politics. As he returns home to be studied by voters fed up with politics of the conventional kind, this is an immensely powerful appeal. Even the best of Ike's opponents have said so much about so many things that their wisest utterances sound somehow stale. There is, of course, nothing wrong in the energy with which men like Taft and Kefauver have pursued the nomination. But it is a fact that the late and fresh appearance of a candidate like General Eisenhower gives him an important tactical advantage.

Ike has not become old, gray and dull in the public mind because he has been, in truth, a modest man and a reluctant candidate. That reluctance—one measure of the respect he holds for the high honor of a presidential nomination—may in the long run commend him more warmly to the voters than other candidates' earnest eagerness for honor.

PROUD PREDICTION is displayed at the Brown Palace Hotel in Denver. After his return from Europe, Ike will make hotel preconvention headquarters.

Party Shoes

COLOR COMES TO MARY JANES

Little girls were wearing the flat single-strap party pumps now known as Mary Janes long before they appeared in 1920 in a famous comic strip on the feet of Buster Brown's girl friend, who probably gave the shoes their present name. Alice, in fact, wore an early version of them in Wonderland to the Mad Hatter's tea party. But until this year Mary Janes almost always came in plain colors—black for winter, white for summer. Now for the first time little girls stepping out to special social functions can wear Mary Janes which come in ready-made pastel tints, in shiny colored patents and, on order, with eye-catching appliques. They can impart a highly individual air to Sunday best clothes or dress up a simple cotton for a party. The dresses worn with them, bare-armed instead of in the usual puffed-sleeve style, show a revival of dotted swiss, a new use of dark colors in cottons and full skirts that go over stiff petticoats.

SHOES MATCH SASHES for very fancy dressing up. These are pumps shown on opposite page. Dotted-swiss dresses (Youngland, $9) go over full petticoats.

CANDY-BOX PASTELS in one-strap style in kid have snap buttons, cost $6.50 a pair (Sandler of Boston). The best-dress petticoats shown with them are stiff chintz, cost about $3.50 each (Style Undies).

TIC-TAG-TOE CUT-OUTS decorate white linen slipper (Capezio, $8.95). The ruffle-sleeved pinafore with sash tied in back has a completed game won by circles embroidered on its bodice (Bo-Peep, $3.95).

BRIGHT PATENTS (Capezio, $7.95 each) are worn to dress up cottons for parties. Checked gingham top and skirt are $3 each, bonnet is $1.50 (Bo-Peep). The gray piqué with striped top is $4 (Youngland).

SNAPPING AT A BID, AUCTIONEER BOOSTS THE PRICE OF AN ARISTIDE

REVENGE ON

Great art collection once destined for museum

For three feverish hours a fortnight ago, the plush Charpentier gallery in Paris was the scene of the greatest art auction of this century. One thousand five hundred collectors, dealers, museum officials and art lovers had come from all over Europe and the U.S. to bid for 69 items in the celebrated collection of Ernest and Gabriel Cognacq. Beginning with the sale of a Fragonard drawing for $8,800, the auction was soon disposing of masterpieces like hot cakes and the entire lot went for nearly one million dollars.

Such prices would have surprised Ernest Cognacq, who had purchased paintings by Renoir and other Impressionists some 60 years ago when they were still selling cheap. A self-made man who developed his push-cart business into a $33 million a year department store (La Samaritaine in Paris), Ernest began his art collection with the purchase of some 18th Century scenes, went on to indulge in sculpture, antique beds, chandeliers, tapestries and a shrewd selection of 19th Century French paintings. After he died in 1928, his nephew Gabriel continued to enrich the collection and, just before the war, announced he would leave it all to the Louvre. But after the war Gabriel was accused by state officials of having collaborated with the Nazis. This made him so indignant that when he died last spring, he revengefully left orders that the collection should be put up for auction, not given to the Louvre. But the museum's disappointment was somewhat assuaged when the new owner of a Cézanne still life (p. 88), which brought the auction's top price, announced he would present it to the Louvre.

the auction began. The top bidder (right), a Parisian art dealer, got it for $2,500, then hustled out of the gallery with case and sculpture in his hands.

DEGAS DANCERS, a pastel done around 1885, was held up by one of the gallery guards for the audience to see. It went for $30,000. The bidding on all the paintings moved fast, often jumping as much as $1,500 in a single bid.

$94,000 CEZANNE, a still life of apples and biscuits, brought the highest price of the entire sale. It was snapped up by Jean Walter, millionaire owner of the Zellulja lead mines in Morocco, three minutes after it was put on the block.

RENOIR PORTRAIT of young girl in a bonnet sold for $64,000. Two other Renoir paintings together brought $78,000. Rest of Cognacq collection, including furniture and jewel boxes, will be auctioned over course of next six months.

ROCKEFELLER CENTER, NEW YORK

He grows a life from a patch of earth

He'll stand there after the day's work, tired and hot and muddy from head to foot. And he'll tell you: "There isn't a job in New York City I'd swap for this."

Then he'll look off across his fields, wondering if you, or any city man, can ever understand what he's trying to say.

The chances are you understand.

There's a feeling comes to a man looking at his farm. Here is his little piece of the world, and his chance to make something of it. Everything a man can get out of life is somewhere in that patch of earth. There's food and drink in it, clothing and houses, books and fiddles, and college for the kids. Whether it's fifty acres or ten thousand, all the makings are there, and what you get out of it is up to you.

You like that feeling, if you're a born farmer.

In the early days, a farmer had only his two hands to work his patch of earth. With them he cleared and built, plowed and seeded and reaped. His wife spun and wove, cooked and preserved. When the children were old enough, they'd add their young muscles to the work. Later, if things went well, there'd be a horse, or maybe a team, to help them make a life from the soil.

Thousands of little pieces of earth . . . each with a man plowing, a woman helping, and kids growing. Add them up, and that was America. And it still is.

Today you'll find machines puffing through the harder jobs. Maybe you'll see a television set in the sitting room, and a dishwashing machine in the kitchen where there used to be a pump. But the farmer is still a man who'll look over his fields in a certain quiet way, wondering if he can ever tell a city man about the feeling in his heart.

Maybe he doesn't need to. Maybe the city man knows. For in this country we are all keepers of fields, all planters and growers. It doesn't matter whether our soil is a factory, an office or a store. Each of us has his piece of the world, and we can look at it at the day's end and say with pride: "I cleared it. I plowed it. I seeded it. The harvest is mine. That's my farm, from which I grew a life."

NEW FACES

A late-starting revue with fresh talent gives Broadway some laughs and a lift

At the end of a theatrical season so full of ailments that critics did everything but put up a tombstone for Broadway, the sick patient got an unexpected shot in the arm from a breezy and unpretentious revue. New Faces of 1952. Digging up new talent where others seemed unable to find it, Producer Leonard Sillman stocked his cast with players almost completely unknown to the stage. From nightclubs and television he recruited Ronny Graham (right), a wild-eyed funnyman who sings, acts as an emcee, dances and also writes his own skits. From a secretary's desk he drafted Alice Gostley (p. 92), one of the funniest female discoveries since Inogene Coca, whom Sillman turned up for his New Faces of 1934.

A good deal of the time in the revue, these performers prove better than their material and the revue has several uninspired spots. Still the heartening handful of new talents gave Broadway a much needed lift for the summer. It also raised a question: would Broadway exploit them next season or would it lose them promptly to the movies and television?

PRECIOUS PENMAN "Truman Kapat" is berlesqued by Ronny Graham, who reads and long windily explains his book The Chronophyl Carneret, writes with a quill, kills off all the characters and then for 799 pages writes of nothing but mess.

OFF FROM LONDON FOR SOUTH AFRICA, BRITAIN'S DE HAVILLAND COMET AIRLINER HEADS FOR JOHANNESBURG TO START THE WORLD'S FIRST COMMERCIAL JET SERVICE.

OFF FOR PARIS, Lindbergh's plane, built specially for the flight, heads out into Long Island Sound. The take-off was at exactly 7:52 a.m. on May 20, 1927.

TRANSATLANTIC

The ocean waste that Lindbergh flew is now

May was a month when the thoughts of airmen turned both back to the daring past and forward to the dizzying future. In May, just 25 years ago, the Atlantic had been conquered by Lindbergh. And in England this present May a British airliner bound for South Africa shrieked off a runway to inaugurate the world's first scheduled all-jet commercial service.

When Lindbergh made his flight the Atlantic airways were deadly and unknown, and the planes were not much more certain. Forward vision in his Spirit of St. Louis was entirely blocked by a makeshift gas tank. He could, if he tried, peek ahead through a makeshift periscope, but he flew across on simple instruments. He made Le Bourget with 85 gallons of spare fuel.

In those days only popular enthusiasm made Lindbergh's chance of getting across alive as low as even money with the bookies. Today a transatlantic flight is not a betting proposition. There have been a few take-off and landing accidents, but no scheduled transatlantic flight has been lost at sea since the war—and the Atlantic airways are often dotted with 60 planes at once. Now, any weekday, in the space of Lindbergh's 33½ hours, 1,800 men, women and children calmly fly across. Last year all the transatlantic surface ships together hauled about 600,000 people across the ocean. This year, with air fares at a record low and demand for space

THE 490-MPH PLANE HAS FOUR ENGINES, SEATS 36

at a peak, the transatlantic airlines may for the first time carry as many as the ships.

In today's transocean travel the British jet is still just a hint of the future. It slips vibrationless through the stratosphere and makes the Johannesburg trip in a record 23½ hours. Medium in range, it cannot quite span the ocean. But the British hope to have a transatlantic model by '54. By then the Atlantic, which men risked so much to conquer (next page), may be the least dramatic of the intercontinental air routes. This spring Scandinavian Airlines System announced that it was planning routes to link Europe and western U.S. with regular commercial flights across the North Pole.

SHORTLY BEFORE TAKE-OFF LINDBERGH STANDS WITH THE PLANE HE PLANNED TO FLY ACROSS THE SEA ALONE

STRATOCRUISER CREW of a modern Pan American plane about to leave for Germany consists of (left to right) the captain, first officer, navigator, third officer, two engineers, purser and two stewardesses. Crew members are trained for their individual jobs and do not necessarily serve together on all flights.

MANY TRIED THE FLIGHT ACROSS

FIRST TRANSATLANTIC FLIGHT was made in 1919 by Navy seaplane, the NC-4, commanded by Albert Read, now retired rear admiral. It left Newfoundland May 16, landed at the Azores, reached Lisbon May 27.

CHAMBERLIN AND LEVINE stand in front of their airplane, Miss Columbia, in Germany after making first nonstop flight there from U.S. in 1927. They had hoped to beat Lindbergh, were delayed, left two weeks later.

ADMIRAL BYRD, with Bernt Balchen, Bert Acosta and George Noville, crash-landed on the French coast just after the Chamberlin flight. Trying for Paris, plane was forced down by weather. None of four was injured.

RUTH ELDER, a movie actress, was the first woman to attempt the flight. She and George Haldeman left the U.S. in October 1927, sprung an oil leak and crashed in ocean near the Azores. They were rescued by a tanker.

GERMAN-IRISH TEAM of Baron von Huenefeld (left), Major Fitzmaurice (center) and Captain Koehl made the first westbound flight April 1928 in plane Bremen. They flew from Ireland, got lost, landed in Labrador.

COSTE AND BELLONTE, in the Question Mark, made the first direct flight from Paris to New York in 1930. Three years earlier Coste, a French war ace, had made a transatlantic crossing from Africa to South America.

THE DO-X, a huge 12-engine German Dornier flying boat, which once carried 169 passengers, started across in November 1930, caught fire in Lisbon and got to New York in August 1931. Its flight back took a month.

JAMES MOLLISON, a Scot, test-flies his Heart's Content before first westward solo crossing from Ireland to New Brunswick in 1932. Later he and his wife, "The Flying Mollisons," made the trip across to U.S. together.

AMELIA EARTHART became the first woman to fly the Atlantic in 1928 when she made the trip with Wilmer Stultz and Lou Gordon. Four years later she set out alone from Newfoundland, landed in Ireland (above).

BALBO SQUADRON, a flight of 24 Italian seaplanes under command of General Italo Balbo, leaves Italy to fly to 1933 Century of Progress Exposition, Chicago. In 1931 he led 14 planes in first South Atlantic mass flight.

MERRILL AND RICHMAN, the latter a nightclub singer, made the first transatlantic round trip in the plane Lady Peace in 1936. In Wales they took off and narrowly missed hitting a movie cameraman (left, above).

THE HINDENBURG, a giant German zeppelin which could carry 50 passengers, entered Atlantic service in 1936, made 10 round trips, caught fire and burned as it landed at Lakehurst in 1937. Thirty-six were killed.

SOME OLDTIMERS TODAY

BERTAUD AND HILL built this take-off ramp for the plane Old Glory and, with New York Daily Mirror Editor Philip Payne as passenger, left Maine Sept. 6, 1927. They crashed off Newfoundland and all were killed.

NC-4'S PILOT Walter Hinton, who flew the plane on the first transatlantic flight, left Navy in 1922, kept flying until 1940. He is now retired real estate broker in New York City. Portrait was painted a few years after flight.

RUTH ELDER, who tried trip at 23, has been married six times, now lives in Hollywood. Her flight, though a failure, brought her much publicity and money from personal appearances. "It was a wonderful era," she says.

POST AND GATTY, in monoplane Winnie Mae, flew from Newfoundland to England in 1931, went on around the world, made record flight in 8½ days. Four years later Post was killed in crash with his passenger, Will Rogers.

JAMES MATTERN sits among the remnants of plane Century of Progress which crashed in Russia in 1933 when he tried round-world flight alone. He had tried it with Bennett Griffin year before and also crashed in Russia.

"WRONG-WAY" CORRIGAN left New York in 1938 after telling authorities, who had refused to let him fly his old plane across Atlantic, he was going to California. Explaining he got mixed up, he flew nonstop to Ireland.

MAURICE BELLONTE, shown here with an elaborate bronze eagle given him by an aero club, lives in Paris and works for the secretariat of civil aviation investigating air crashes. During the war, unlike his ex-partner Coste, he worked for the resistance movement. Coste, who had become director of the Hispano Suiza auto works, was suspected of being a collaborationist and spy. He was tried in 1949 and was acquitted by a vote of five to four.

BERNT BALCHEN is now an Air Force colonel and the foremost U.S. expert on polar and cold-weather flying. He flew over both poles, flew for the OSS during World War II, holds the Medal of Honor, still flies a good deal.

CLARENCE CHAMBERLIN, now 58, barnstormed during '30s, became a dairyman, is now an auto dealer in Bridgeport, Conn. His partner, Levine, became penniless, served a jail term for smuggling and disappeared.

OLD-STYLE LUNCH for transatlantic fliers was prepared by the wives of Bertaud and Chamberlin, who planned the flight together, later went separately.

NEW-STYLE MEAL aboard the President Special is served one course at a time and is presided over by a steward who pours the passengers free champagne.

FLIGHT DECK of a Boeing Stratocruiser flying the Atlantic under actual instrument conditions has relaxed air as the plane approaches New York. In fore-

FIRST COACH FLIGHT, a TWA Constellation left Idlewild just after midnight on May 1 and is here shown on way to Paris. Actually all the airlines started their coach service at once, but this plane got off the ground first. When arranged as a coach this type of plane seats 53, when designed for a de luxe flight, 27.

SAFETY AND

Just as the sprouting airpower of the First World War helped give man planes to fly the Atlantic, it was the second war that established the Atlantic routes, with their bases, rescue and weather stations. In 1939 Pan American Airways had started commercial runs. But it was the tens of thousands of military planes shuttling back and forth across the seas that turned the big adventure into a flat routine. Today Pan American, Trans World Airlines and nine foreign airlines are flying over the North Atlantic, and by August their flights will total about 17,000 seats each way each week.

The kind of passenger that the airlines count on to fill these seats is the traveler with a little money put away and too little time to take a ground is engineer who watches the engine instruments and changes power at pilot's request. At right is the third officer and in left front seat is pilot. Their boat trip. Last month the 11 lines began a new cut-rate coach service which charges $486 for a New York-London round trip and seats the passengers five abreast—80, for instance, in the DC-6B. At the other end of the scale are the de luxe flights, like Pan American's President Special (New York-London round trip in season: $711), which give lady passengers presents of orchids and perfume, and serve champagne and liqueurs with meals prepared by Maxim's in Paris. On the Special, waited on by five cabin attendants, a passenger can stretch his legs, for on these flights the Stratocruiser carries only 51 passengers. Pan American, like TWA, has a standard flight, priced between the de luxe and the coach, and on this the Stratocruiser seats 60.

This spring Pan American was confident enough of its coach flights to place a record order for 21 more Douglas DC-6Bs at over $1 million apiece, which will give its international system by far the biggest fleet in the world. TWA is also expanding its system to the tune of 10 new 64-passenger Lockheed Super-Constellations.

Nowadays, while the passengers loll in the back, the six-man Stratocruiser flight crew works at ease up front with 11 radios, Loran and radar to guide it. Much of the actual flying is done by automatic pilot, and instead of wondering whether or not they will make the coast, the fliers seek out the invisible pressure areas over the sea, using their knowledge of the ocean's tricks to find fair weather and a tail wind home.

LINDBERGH'S COCKPIT in the Spirit of St. Louis was fairly roomy. He carried three compasses, two on the panel and one on the floor between his feet.

MODERN PANEL of a Stratocruiser engineer has more than 50 instruments. Besides checking engines, he keeps passenger cabin at comfortable pressure.

EVEN EAGLES ARE FREIGHT

Back around 1910, the story goes, a Cleveland haberdasher thought up the idea of the first air freight. He had a crate of neckties to get to Detroit in a hurry, so he hired a plane and rode beside the pilot with the neckties in his lap. Compared to the present passenger business, air freight over the Atlantic is in an equally formative stage. The scheduled lines carry freight along with their passengers and in 1951 the total was hardly enough to fill one self-respecting tramp steamer. But business has quadrupled since the war. Seaboard & Western, a nonscheduled freight airline which is the biggest transatlantic all-freight carrier, has crossed the ocean 1,488 times in the last five years, built its fleet from one to eight DC-4s and has five new Super-Constellations on order.

Like the man with the neckties, most users of air freight have a special reason for wanting delivery fast, and in addition to their regular flow of freight the planes end up with all sorts of odds and ends. Sometimes there are hats or dresses to rush west from a Paris showing. Often there are race horses to ship across quickly lest their muscles stiffen up—one made the flying trip three times in five weeks. Once in a while there are emergencies; not long ago a ship in Italy damaged its rudder and Seaboard flew a seven-ton assembly across to patch it up. Currently an important item in westbound freight is the dog. GIs in Germany are using the air age to ship pets back to their families at home.

GOLDEN EAGLE that performed in movie Valley of the Eagles arrives from Germany for his premiere.

WESTBOUND FREIGHT is dollied up to Seaboard & Western plane at Frankfurt, Germany for shipment to the U.S. via Iceland and Gander. The DC-4, hauling seven tons, reached New York in 24 hours.

WESTERN TERMINAL for most of passengers and freight is Idlewild airport (above). New York had one customs inspector for air passengers in 1939 and now Idlewild alone has 40 with 35 more for freight.

BABY ELEPHANTS for a Brooklyn zoo made up one cargo of tropical animals hauled by Seaboard & Western. There were six of them and they weighed 1,500 pounds apiece. Seaboard picked them up in Bangkok and flew them to the U.S. for $2,500 each. They went by air as it was safer, healthwise, than a long boat ride.

Capitalist on the Loose

HE ARGUES WITH COMMISSAR, HAS TROUBLE OVER A STALIN MUSTACHE

by OLIVER VICKERY

MY spring vacation in Moscow started when I saw an item in the papers about an International Economic Conference which the Russians were planning to hold. They had, I read, invited Charles Wilson of General Motors, Marshall Field and Banker James Warburg, but not Oliver Vickery, president of the Ferro-Bet Co. of San Francisco, which makes an excellent rust preventer. I hastened to rectify this Soviet oversight by a letter to the Russian Embassy in Washington stating that I might be available, if invited—and should I take dinner clothes? I got back a letter asking me right over to Moscow. Dinner clothes, they told me, were “an Anglo-Saxon custom” and were not worn in Russia for international conferences. Next I latched onto a rare possession: a one-month visa to the U.S.S.R., no strings attached.

I was quite aware of the fact that the U.S. State Department had denounced the conference as a new variation of the old Red “peace” theme and as an attempt to pierce the West’s economic front against Communism. But I decided to go anyway. I had three reasons: to sell a little free enterprise, American brand; to take some pictures; and for the ride. After all it isn’t every day you get a chance to spend three weeks in Russia. I did just about anything I pleased, including taking 1,000 feet of movies. I did it by assuming the invincible attitude: “By golhes, I’m an American—when in Moscow do as the Americans do!” They really had the big Red propaganda carpet out for this one, and I figured they wouldn’t want to get any lint on it. Also they looked on me as a character. According to my interpreter, I became known all over Moscow as “the man with the camera and the beret”—a kind of headgear I favor only in foreign countries, being a Republican, a Mason and an American Legionnaire.

I managed to free-load most of the way, but the trip still cost me $5,000. Just the same, it was worth every ruble of it. I paid my own way to Vienna and VIP’d on a Soviet plane from there to Moscow airport, where I landed on the cold day of March 30. I had hardly stepped out of the plane before I heard a loud voice calling, “Mr. Vickery! Mr. Vickery!” Up marched a middle-aged, fur-capped Russian who introduced himself as Mr. Makariev. “I am an English teacher at the Polytechnic School and am your interpreter henceforward,” he said. “A limousine is awaiting you. Say, that suitcase you have is really the cat’s whiskers!” He was a real 23-skiddon character, that Makariev. Like all language teachers he was always collecting slang terms, even though it was not easy for him to tell which ones were out of date. He turned out to be a nice guy though.

With another Russian who was never introduced to me, Makariev and I got in the back seat of a shiny new ZIM—the Russian copy of a Packard—with a liveried chauffeur on the other side of the glass partition. As we rolled off, Makariev asked pleasantly:

“Is this the first time you’ve been in Moscow?”

I said, “Yes.”

“Well,” he said, “it’s our aim to make you happy and to let you see as much as you want to see.”

“My friend,” I beamed, “I’m in the mood to take you up on that.” I patted my shoulder. “I brought my movie camera along.”

It was a 16-mm Bell & Howell I had bought three hours before leaving for Moscow. Makariev glanced at the camera but didn’t say anything.

We had about a 35-mile ride before we slid up in front of the brand-new Sovietskaya Hotel, a fancy marble affair just opened in time to accommodate the 450 conference delegates from 46 nations. Brother, what a sight! About 300 sightseers were waiting to see us delegates arrive. I shifted my two-for-a-quarter cigar to the left side of my mouth, cocked my beret and emerged to the bows of a doorman dressed like a fleet admiral. Inside I got registered in by a girl room clerk, with Makariev giving her the word to speed it up, kid, because I had just passed the intelligence that I had a cold. She gave me a free meal ticket for four meals a day—four!—and we heisted up to my room on the third floor. The bellhop flung open the door and I swaggered inside.

By golhes!

“Well, Mr. Vickery, how do you like it?” This came from the other Russian who had come with us from the airport; it was the first time

I knew he had a voice. "If you don't like it, we'll give you something else," he added.

It was a three-room suite: a huge living room with a radio-TV set and an upright piano; a bedroom with outsized twin beds pushed together, luscious tapestries and a balcony; a library with leather upholstery, two telephones, writing desk, quill pens and two kinds of ink, black and red.

"Like it!" I said, and took a pull on my cigar. "Man, I never had it so good!"

"Thank you," the other Russian glowed. "My duties have concluded themselves." He bowed and left. He was a protocol officer, I found out later—a real specialist.

I spent the next five minutes finding my way around in the suite. I turned on the TV set. It didn't work, but I decided not to complain to the management. After all, there was the piano.

With this cold of mine there was nothing to do but undress and get to bed, which I did while Makariev fetched me a doctor. She was a six-foot 200-pounder and took my temperature rectally, which I suppose is the way they do it in Russia. She was trailed by a tiny nurse in white carrying a medicine chest almost as big as herself. They batted me down with pills and a basin by my bed, so I could gargle without getting up. Next morning it was tea, a slice of lemon and a sweet roll; at noon, two oranges, ham and eggs, caviar and warm milk. I spent the day in bed holding court for a flock of conference big shots who dropped in to pay their respects, including Dr. Oscar Lange, the former Polish ambassador to the U.S.; he was now professor of the Higher School of Planning and Statistics in Warsaw and one of the directors of the conference.

By the next day I felt better. The conference didn't kick off until April 3, so I decided to do some sightseeing and photographic exploration. A chauffeured ZIM awaited the lifting of my little finger. In fact, there was a whole parking lot of them for the delegates in front of the hotel. I hadn't been rubbernecking around town long before the business of my camera came up. I was all ready for it.

"THE MAN WITH THE CAMERA" looked like this when he was roaming all over Moscow between sessions of the conference. Vickery is 55 and unmarried, has worked for International Harvester and has been a vice president of The Bank of United States. He is known as a quixotic but very successful salesman. Ferro-Bet, which he heads, is a small firm which manufactures a rust preventer.

"Why, if you were in New York, Chicago or San Francisco," I told Makariev, "you could take all the pictures you wanted."

"Maybe so," the English teacher said stoically. "But I'll have to get permission from the higher authority."

This turned out to be M. V. Nesterov, a real big shot. He is president of the U.S.S.R. Chamber of Commerce (they have one too).

"You know, Mr. Nesterov," I said confidentially, "Americans told me I couldn't take pictures in Moscow. I want to prove they're wrong."

Nesterov finally agreed. Most of the other delegates were hopping mad with themselves for not thinking to bring cameras; they just assumed there wasn't a chance they'd get to use them.

Starting April 2, we went to ballet or opera every night at the Bolshoi Theater. It was tops. Thirty toe dancers. Eighty musicians.

Caviar sandwiches and "sweetwater" (that's pop) at intermission. Box seats or the front three rows. All for free. Outside, my chauffeur and the limousine waited four hours—just for me—until the ballet was over.

It was at the ballet that I gave Makariev a couple more items for his language collection, one of which he appreciated and one of which he didn't.

One night everyone was yelling "Bravo!" after a number. I topped them with "Muchísimo Bravo!" Makariev was very interested, and I told him what it meant. Several people around us were listening.

"Or," I said, beaming, "you could even top that with: Generalissimo Muchísimo Bravo!"

Makariev's smile faded and he hissed, "Sh-h-h."

On April 4 I made my big speech in the Hall of Columns. You weren't supposed to bring up ideology at the conference, which was ticketed for a sweetness and light feast, but there, just two blocks from the Kremlin, I told them, "I believe in the system of free enterprise, which inspires and promotes individual initiative, produces and distributes consumer goods more equitably than any other economic system." I said a few more things in favor of free enterprise, and I was flabbergasted when I got a big round of applause at the end of my speech. They told me it was unprecedented that I wasn't tongue-whipped. Instead I was one of only 18 delegates elected to the high presidium. Me, Oliver Vickery of Ferro-Bet, a member of a high presidium! Of course Pravda's editors distorted the speech when they quoted it, though.

One morning there arrived in my suite a big carton of cigarets with a card: "Compliments of the VOKS Society." I didn't know the VOKS Society from Joe Blowski. I'd hardly had time to open the box when the phone buzzed.

VICKERY'S ZIM was at his service throughout his stay.

delegates stayed, is brand new, has mostly big suites, bilingual help and is the showcase of Russian hospitality. Its clientele is carefully restricted to foreigners.

"Hello! Mr. Vickery? I represent the VOKS Society. How are you getting along? How do you like your stay? Do you like the hotel? Is everything all right? Are you happy? Did you get the cigarettes we sent? I'm having my secretary arrange seats tonight for the opera at the Bolshoi Theater. I'll meet you at seven. Don't eat much dinner. After the opera I'm taking you to the best Georgian restaurant in all Moscow. Real Russian shishkebab!"

At 7 a man showed up, said he was from VOKS and that he used to be Molotov's interpreter at the U.N. He dismissed Makarev and took me to the opera. Then off to the restaurant, where the waiters bowed us in and we had some fragrant shishkebab, complete with wines, vodkas, liqueurs and Georgian dancers. When I got back to the hotel at 2:30 a.m., the best shishkebab I'd ever had was practically coming out of my ears. But I still didn't know what VOKS was.

Next morning a box of cigars arrived: "Compliments VOKS Society." I was glad to see the cigars, which I couldn't say for the cigarettes. Next day my shishkebab friend rang up: "You happy, Mr. Vickery?" It seemed as if everyone in Moscow was asking me if I was happy.

"I'm highly happy," I said. "Nice cigars you people put out."

"Thank you, sir! You know what VOKS is?"

"Don't have the slightest idea, sir."

"VOKS," said he, "is the Russian cultural organization. You must meet vice president of VOKS!"

"Anything you say!"

Next day he picked me up and we whipped over to the Moscow Hotel, one block from the Kremlin, and up to the veep's suite. A butler relieved me of my coat and beret, and we passed through two rooms into the living room. The vice president of the VOKS Society was clean-shaven and blond, and looked at me with sharp blue eyes. He was six feet tall, and he had a platform behind his desk that was a step higher than the floor. We all sat down. The veep said something in Russian and my shishkebab friend said, "Mister Vice President wants to know if you're happy?"

By golly! I thought. Do I look unhappy or something?

"You tell Mister Vice President that I'm very happy," I said just a little grimly.

The veep said something and the shishkebab comrade said, "Mister Vice President asks if you are enjoying your stay in Moscow."

"You tell Mister Vice President," I said, looking up at him on his throne, "that I'm amazed. Your hospitality has exceeded all my expectations."

The interpreter shifted a bit in his chair and translated something: "Mister Vice President said he heard your speech. While he did not agree with all you said, he was impressed with the thought that the conference could be the nucleus for better U.S.-U.S.S.R. relations."

The interpreter paused, and I was still thinking up a polite answer when I was startled to hear him say, "One, Mister Vice President wants to know why the U.S. declared a trick peace with Japan without consulting Russia?"

I started to answer that, but he went on: "Two, Mister Vice President wants to know why are Americans interfering in the Korean

Then, you tell Mister Vice President I'd like to drink to his health."

And that is what we did. Bottoms up. With vodka. Then we went into the dining room and had a duck dinner.

Whenever the conference sessions weren't going on I put the time to advantage just making trips around Moscow. The only group trip I went on with the other delegates was to the Kremlin, where we saw the Politburo meeting room and the chair where Stalin sits. I thought: Well, here's where they decide it all, here's where they'll decide whether we have the big war or not; right there in that one chair is where he will decide it.

Except for that junket, I free-lanced it. I'd get up early in the morning and stroll around Moscow for a couple of hours photographing anything I wanted. I even took pictures of their slums; there was a section, complete with tarpaper roofs, outdoor toilets and the like, practically around the corner from our swank hotel. Usually Makariev went along, but often it was just the chauffeur and me. The chauffeur, not being a big shot, would get a little emotional when I took pictures. The car windows had buttons you pressed to make them go up and down. Once we were cruising along in the ZIM and I pressed the button to unroll the window for a spot of picture-taking. I was about to lean out when—whing!—the window rolled back up. I jumped. Then I saw the chauffeur looking at me twitchingly in the rear-view mirror. He had a button up front to operate the back-seat windows. I pressed mine again—down went the window. He pressed his again—up went the window. This went on for quite a while. I thought of mentioning to the chauffeur that it was right out of the Marx Brothers but quickly decided he would probably think I was making fun of the great Karl.

MOSCOW SLUMS, with broken-down buildings and Russian kids playing in the muddy streets, made a subject for Vickery's camera on one of his tours.

There were only two things apparently forbidden to my camera: soldiers and factories. Makariev always accompanied me to the factories, including a textile plant and the enormous Stalin car factory in Moscow. At the Stalin plant the superintendent showed me around personally, and I saw some machinery—I think it was pre-war—marked "manufactured in Erie, Pa." A truck like the kind you see in the pictures of North Korea was coming off the assembly line every 15 minutes. Women were doing most of the work, even the heavy work like turning over big steel bars. It looked as if about 60% of the work in Russia was being done by women. I guess that's because so many of the men are in uniform; I estimated one out of 10 persons I saw was in uniform.

On a Sunday I arranged through Lange to visit a church. It was the most crowded church I've ever been in. There were no pews, but there must have been 2,000 people standing, jammed into every inch of space.

Everywhere I went, when people found out I was American they'd come up and say, "My hotim mira" ("We want peace"). I knew Makariev wasn't giving me a line when he kept saying it, because everyone greeted me with the same phrase each time. I went in a department store and a clerk said to me, "My hotim mira." I got it everywhere like a chant.

I like talking to people and I struck up a conversation with the manicurist in the hotel downstairs while she trimmed my nails. She was a streamlined sister, about 28 and blond.

"A nice-looking girl like you," I said, "why aren't you in the Bolshoi Theater?"

"I was for two years," she said. I don't know whether this is an international party line with manicurists or not. "Then they decided I could cut fingernails better than dance steps," she said. "You an American delegate?"

I said yes, and then came the old refrain, which I suppose the people meant even if it sounded like a drumbeat: "We want peace."

"Listen, honey," I said, "I want peace, too. But I want more than that. I want security with it."

"Do you want some sweet-smelling oils?"

"What?"

"On your fingernails—some sweet-smelling oils."

"Leave 'em dry," I said.

Still she painted my nails pale pink. I paid my two rubles and four kopeks—she refused a tip—then I went in and got a haircut. In Moscow you can't get your nails and hair cut at the same time.

The barber started in cutting and I said, to start the conversation, "I'm an American delegate."

He stopped cutting. "Excuse," he said, very politely. "We are not allowed to talk while doing work."

There being nothing more annoying to me than loose-lipped barbers, I decided this was one Russian custom I'd be enchanted to carry back to America. He was also the first barber I've ever known to refuse a tip.

We had a pretty good social life at the hotel. After the ballet or

Science reveals new ingredient for easy shaves

Wonderful substance outdoes lanolin, makes beard softer, lubricates, protects skin—
and is available now

For years science has searched for a shaving preparation that would enhance the wetting action of soap and at the same time have a beneficial emollient effect on the skin—a characteristic not present in most shaving soap.

Chemists at The J. B. Williams Co. undertook extensive research into the problem. We asked ourselves this question: Would use of the free sterols present in "Extract of Lanolin" provide the improved shaving preparation we sought to make?

Advantages of Extract of Lanolin

Even though present in comparatively small percentages, "Extract of Lanolin" can efficiently increase the water penetration of the shaving cream. Imparting moisture to the beard is, as dermatologists know, essential in wet shaving.

The free sterols of extract of lanolin can penetrate the waxy coating of the skin with great hydrophilic effect. This is because it is a natural product closely resembling the skin surface fat.

How it works

"Extract of Lanolin" in shaving cream forms a film on the surface of each lather bubble and, due to its surface-active nature, tends to penetrate the pores and recesses of the skin—providing the following beneficial effects:

1. The beard becomes wet, easier to shave.
2. The rigid emollient film can act as a lubricant for the razor, helping to prevent abrasion, or "razor burn," by reducing friction to a minimum.
3. There is minimum tendency to leave the skin with less of the protective sterols than present before shaving. Natural protective skin-coating isn't "shaved away."

We then wanted to know how dermatologists themselves felt. 90% of the doctors surveyed approved the idea with enthusiasm.

Result: a superior product

As a result of our findings, and the approval of dermatologists, The J. B. Williams Company is now offering our Luxury Shaving Cream with "Extract of Lanolin."

We don't wish to make extravagant claims; but we do say that our shaving preparation, through qualities made possible with "Extract of Lanolin," will cut to a minimum the skin irritation due to shaving. This, we believe, should be of particular interest to you, as a man who wants better shaves.

We're so sure you'll become a steady user of Williams that we make you this FREE offer:

Send your name and address and get a free guest-size tube of Williams Luxury Shaving Cream with "Extract of Lanolin" . . . enough for three weeks' trial. For your free tube, write: The J. B. Williams Co., Dept. LS-3, Glastonbury, Connecticut. (Offer good only in U.S.A. and Canada.)

opera was over, usually about midnight, we delegates would come back in a convoy of ZIMs to the hotel, which had food, drinks and dancing until 3 a.m. The orchestra played a lot of American music, including The Missouri Waltz, and once I danced with the wife of a Russian delegate to the strains of Old Smoky.

Sometimes another American delegate would come down to my suite and play the piano and we'd order up some Russian chow. We were entitled, as I said, to four meals a day: breakfast of two oranges, caviar, ham and eggs, potatoes, toast, coffee, jam; dinner from noon to 3, with a 20-page bill of fare ranging from pheasant to smoked sturgeon; tea from 4 to 6, with tea, cakes, caviar and toast; supper from 8 to 3 a.m., with steak, chops, ducks or anything from the 20-page menu. The waiter would tear off a coupon for each meal. Lots of times we'd only eaten two meals the day before, leaving six for today if we wanted it. So we'd order up a feast of duck, pheasant, caviar, smoked sturgeon—the works—making the coupons fly. The waiter would come in staggering under the tray and my friend and I would sit over our feast putting on the dog.

"You know," I'd say, "this beats Atlantic City!"
"Brother, you said it."

Trouble over a mustache

I LIKE a gag as much as the next fellow, but one day I carried it a shade too far. Just before I left the States I'd gone with some friends to the Gay Nineties, a nightclub in San Francisco. Now, in my suite in Moscow, I discovered I still had in my pocket one of those cardboard black handlebar mustaches they give out at the Gay Nineties. While I was waiting for my breakfast to be sent up I put the mustache on and started parading around the suite in my dressing robe, stroking the mustache, looking at myself in the mirror and saying things like:

"Boy, I never had it so good! Meals served in your room! Pardon me—suite! Three-room suite. Block-long limousines! Uniformed chauffeurs! Could this be Russia!"

At that moment the door opened and the waiter came in. He spotted my cardboard mustache and almost dropped his tray. Without a word, he served the breakfast and left.

An hour and a half later a stranger came up to my suite.

"Hello, Mr. Vickery," he said, with a friendly smile. "Are you happy? Do you like living here?"

"Fine!" I said. "Couldn't be better."

He hemmed around and then asked, "Mr. Vickery, you do not like our Generalissimo Stalin?"

"Why, sir, I've never met the gentleman," I said. "Nothing I'd like better than an introduction. Could you arrange it?"

"Mr. Vickery," the man said. "You wear a funny mustache, making fun of the Generalissimo."

Then I got it. Actually the mustache does look a little like the Generalissimo's. I hurriedly explained that the subversive item in question was from a nightclub in San Francisco and showed him the printing on the back. He seemed satisfied. But he confiscated the mustache.

I had one other run-in with this same man. The day after my speech at the conference I got a cablegram from the Commonwealth Club in San Francisco inviting me to speak there when I got back. It was addressed: "Colonel Oliver Vickery." My eagles are strictly the Kentucky kind. But my Russian friend of the mustache by British M.P. Samuel S. Silverman; cereals and vegetables in a fancy showcase (center); and the newest in Russian heaters (at top, right) and gas ranges.

incident had no way of knowing this, so he arrived in my suite right after the cablegram.

"Mr. Vickery," he said, "are you a colonel in the United States Army?"

"Suh," I said, "I am a colonel—but not a fightin' colonel."

That didn't seem to clear it up for him, so I had to explain the whole system of Kentucky colonels. "It is an affectionate title. It is symbolic of the old South. It expresses hospitality and goodwill. It is not a military title, although there were times, I suppose, in the old days. . . ."

I really didn't want them to think I was trying to deceive them, or to think that I was an Army colonel in Ferro-Bet's clothing. My visitor finally seemed convinced by my explanation, though I suggested he ask the Soviet Embassy in Washington to wire the governor of Kentucky to verify the difference between Kentucky colonels and fighting colonels. I don't know whether he did or not, but I heard no more about the incident.

The only other trouble of any kind I had on my Moscow swing was when I started sending "Having wonderful time" cablegrams back to the U.S. and ending them: "Uncle Joe sends regards." One day the telegraph girl asked me, "Is that a courteous way to refer to the head of a state?"

"Of course!" I exclaimed jovially. "Haven't you heard of Uncle Sam?" That stopped her.

I am at heart and by training a salesman. I find myself practicing it by habit even when I'm pretty sure it won't get anywhere. So I was naturally interested when my hosts started talking about how big an order they wanted to place with the U.S.

On April 5 Nesterov, the chamber of commerce president, made a speech saying Russia would like to do a billion and a quarter dollars' worth of business with the U.S. in the next three years. That night Nesterov threw a big blow for the delegates at the hotel. You could have slid across the room on caviar, duck and ham, or waded across in vodka. I had attracted quite a little attention with my April 4 speech including the part about my liking capitalism best, and I decided this party was a good time to attract a little more. Nesterov and I had talked about that big order, and he had brought around the deputy minister of trade to meet me. That night at the party he fetched over the High Commissioner of Purchase, I think his title was. Anyhow, it sounded like something out of Gilbert and Sullivan.

"What does Ferro-Bet mean?" the high commissioner said, referring to my company. "Ferro? A steel company perhaps?"

"Not at all," I said. "We stop rust."

The commissioner's eyes lit up and I turned on some of that old American salesmanship, thinking, just by habit, "Well, by golly, here's a chance to sell a little rust preventer."

"Are you aware," I said, "that rust causes more damage than fire? And do you know that our rust preventer will keep submarines from rusting?"

The commissioner of purchase put down a slice of duck, left and was right back with a naval officer. The naval officer became extremely interested in my rust preventer.

"How much have you got of it?" he asked.

"Ten thousand tons," I said glibly. Actually my own office had only a half ton, but we had factories in Europe which had the rest, though it was committed.

"Can you ship it to us right away?" the naval officer asked.

There I hedged. "I'll have to talk it over with my government."

The naval officer left and came back with a man he introduced as a bigshot chemical man. He was munching on a caviar sandwich.

STALINLIKE MUSTACHE got Vickery into trouble when he wore it in Moscow. It was confiscated, but for sentiment's sake he got another (above).

"Do you have something like this?" I asked the chemical commissar. "Something where you just spray it on and rust won't form?"

The chemical commissar almost choked on his caviar sandwich. "How's it made?" he asked ravenously.

I wagged my finger. "Uh-huh, chief. No secrets."

The rest of the night my table was the most popular spot at the party. I had a secret formula to prevent rust! I didn't intend to give it to them, of course. I just wanted to see how far they would go.

Next day Nesterov and I had a confab. Outside the conference rooms were desks labeled "United Kingdom," "U.S.A." and so on, where Russians would meet with delegates from these countries to talk orders. No American ever showed up at the "U.S.A." table, but after the session I cornered Nesterov in an anteroom and began: "You made a speech about wanting a billion and a quarter in trade with the U.S. Could I have that order?"

Nesterov got a cagey look. "What have you got?"

I got a cagey look. "What do you need?"

We tossed these phrases back and forth about six times, and then he gave me a list including electric generators, high-compression machinery, machine tools and so on, which he said they wanted for "peaceful construction." The list also included some pharmaceutical things like toothbrushes.

"You know," Nesterov mused, "it might make Charles Wilson and the rest of them very envious and sorry they didn't come to the conference. I mean if you got the order. I tell you: you may have the order."

Naturally I didn't take this too seriously: I realized that the order was obviously for propaganda purposes—another chance for the Russians to complain about America's stingy trade restrictions. But I would play around with the proposition for fun. I cannot help being fascinated by a billion and a quarter dollars in orders. To me this was as big as the Federal Reserve System. So I made some notes on what Nesterov wanted. Soon after that Nan Han-chen, president of the People's Bank of China and Red China's chief delegate, tried to place an order with me: a mere hundred million dollars.

"By gollyes, man," I told him, "do you expect me to fool around with chicken feed? The Russians are offering me a billion and a quarter dollars!"

Chen looked a little sad. "We need electric generators, compression machinery, lead and armored cable, telephone wire, pneumatic tubes . . . I don't suppose you would sell us rails and locomotives?"

"Chen, old man," I said, "I'd have to take it up with the proper authorities in Washington."

ALERT WAITER saw Vickery with the mustache, told on him.

"READY, DAD?" Doris Arnold took her hands away from her father's eyes, stepped around in front of his chair and swirled about in her shimmering satin wedding gown. Then she said, in a shy voice that was almost a whisper, "Do you like it?"

"Like it! I've never seen anything so beautiful, Doris!" Jeff Arnold glanced at his wife, still standing at the entrance to the living room, and then winked at Doris and added, "Except once."

Beth Arnold came in and sat on the arm of her husband's chair. "That's my Jeff," she said, "always tactful! But honestly, isn't it a dream? There are still a few things to be done to it, but it will be ready in plenty of time."

She reached over, smoothed out a small wrinkle in the dress and then said, "Doris and I were just talking about the old custom—you know, 'something old, something new, something borrowed, something blue'—and we ran into a snag. Doris is all set as far as everything else is concerned, but we can't decide on what she should wear that's old. There's that brooch my grandmother left me, or those pearls of Mother's . . ."

"Or the old emerald ring Aunt Molly gave me when I graduated," Doris interrupted. "Or . . ."

Jeff Arnold rubbed his chin, looked up at his daughter and said, "Tell you what, Doris—I've got just the thing for you. I don't know quite how you'll manage to wear it, but it's something old, all right." He reached in his inside pocket and said, "Know what it is?"

Without waiting for an answer, Jeff pulled out his wallet, took a check from it and handed it to Doris. "Money. And with it my very best wishes . . ."

"Dad! Mother!" Doris cried. "What in the world . . . why, how . . . for goodness' sake . . ."

"Easy, Doris, easy," Jeff said, smiling up at her. "I know the size of the check surprises you. But actually it's something that has been growing up with you for years and years and has always been intended for you.

"You see, right after you were born, Tom Barton, the New York Life agent, came to the house and advised me to take out some more insurance. Among other things, he suggested that I take an endowment policy so that no matter what might happen you'd always be sure to have enough money to go on to college when you grew up.

"Well, we managed to put you through college without touching the insurance, praise be, and when it matured a while ago we put the money aside as an extra wedding present for you." Jeff chuckled and said, "Anyway, I hope it will do for your 'something old'—because it's almost as old as you are!"

SIDETRIP TO PEKING was made by British and Brazilian manufacturers and a British union leader. Oliver Vickery turned down invitation to go along.

I was surprised at his reply, which was an invitation to visit Peking. That's one invitation I declined, but I found out later that some British and Brazilian delegates accepted.

I'm always getting ideas. One idea I got while in Moscow was to free William Oatis, the Associated Press correspondent, and bring him back to the States. After all, Otakar Pohl, director-general of the Czechoslovak State Bank, was a fellow member of the high presidium. With Oatis in mind, I made it a point to get a little friendly with Pohl, and after a few days of this I cornered him in the hotel lobby.

"See here, Mr. Pohl," I said. "I know this economic conference means a lot to you. If you really want it to mean even more, why don't you free Oatis? Then America may start doing business with you. Mr. Pohl, people in America don't even know if Oatis is alive. If I went to Prague, could I see Oatis?"

Pohl stared at me. "I'll let you know later," he said crisply. That evening he surprised me by saying that it had all been arranged; I could see Oatis. I didn't have a Czech visa, so I hopped over to see our chargé d'affaires at the American Embassy. He asked our State Department in Washington. They said no. If I saw Oatis, the argument went, the Czechs would probably have him all dressed up nice and I'd get the impression they'd been giving him ice cream and cakes, and they'd use me for propaganda. Pohl went ahead anyhow and got me a visa through the Czech Embassy, but I thought it over and decided that in view of my own State Department's attitude I had better not go. I still think the State Department was wrong, and that it would have been better for me at least to get a look-see at Oatis. I don't know what the connection was, if any, but I noticed that the Czechs put Oatis in the same kind of showcase for a U.S. ambassador only three weeks later. My personal request for Oatis' release still stands, and I have just received a cable from Pohl, saying that it is being considered by the proper authorities. I'm not holding my breath until they release Oatis, though.

After the conference wound up April 12, I asked the Russians if I could make a trip to Leningrad, and they said okay. I visited an agricultural machinery factory there and a big art gallery full of Rembrandts, Van Dycks and the like. Also, for 55 rubles, I saw a place they called the "Vault of the Radiance," containing the loot—the crown jewels of the czars. I had to pay for my transportation to Leningrad, $155 for an 800-mile railroad round trip, with me in the lower berth of a room and Makariev, paying his own way, in the upper. The room had no toilet, so whenever Makariev went to the washroom, I locked the door and took pictures of railroad cars on the sidings. I got about 100 feet of film this way. Unfortunately, coming back from Leningrad I forgot one day and left the door unlocked, and the woman porter caught me with my camera open. Makariev was a little peeved.

"Why did you do it?" he said in a hurt tone.

"Well!" I said, "I had permission."

"Not on railroads," he said.

Still, old Makariev stuck up for me when a police officer on the train came in and took away my camera. When we got to Moscow and went into the police office at the railroad station, there was a lot of talk until finally a colonel showed up and phoned Nesterov, who said it was okay for me to have my camera back. The police officer from the train, the colonel and two other police officers in the station were all very polite, but they declined my request when I asked, "Will you gentlemen all come outside and pose for me?"

I left Moscow for good then, by plane, making brief visits to Stalingrad, Yalta, Odessa and Minsk. Unfortunately I was out of film by this time. In Yalta I wanted to go swimming, but I still had that cold. I still do, as a matter of fact.

As soon as I got back to the States, I went to Washington and headed for the Russian desk at the State Department. I told them about the billion and a quarter dollars' order from old Nesterov. They asked me what items were included, and when I told them they said there was one part of it I could fill.

"What?" I asked.

"The toothbrushes," they said.

I am sending that word by cable to M. V. Nesterov, president of the U.S.S.R. Chamber of Commerce. I guess Charles Wilson and the rest of them won't be so envious of the president of Ferro-Bet after all, but even though the Russians will never know for sure, we still make a fine rust preventer.

GAY WARD WORKER FROM NEW ORLEANS DOES IMPROMPTU DANCE IN FRONT OF GOVERNOR'S HOTEL

Life Goes to a New Governor's First Party

LOUISIANA CELEBRATES A LIVELY INAUGURATION

Baton Rouge, Louisiana's capital, was filled with gay hunting and thousands of out-of-towners—"country folks" from the bayous and red hills, "city folks" from New Orleans. They had come to inaugurate new Governor Bob Keaton, who had walloped the Long political machine this spring. Sulkily ignoring treason, retiring Governor Earl Long. Huey's brother, had refused to ride in the inaugural parade and had gone to his farm in the country. But nobody seemed to miss Earl or mind the muggy weather.

Enthusiastic Keaton supporters danced in the streets and shouted rebel yells at him as he rode to the capitol to take the oath of office and review the parade of 91 bands and 40 floats. Fifteen different luncheons were held in his honor, the governor and his wife managing to get around to every one of them. There was an open house at the executive mansion and, finally, a great ball in the old room. The ball came off with a zesty and glamorous triglet despite the cornmeal that had to be scattered over the floor to dry up the DDT that had been liberally sprayed to kill the mosquitoes in the building.

YOUNG ADMIRER. 8 year old Mary Ann Hynes gives bouquet of roses to governor and wife at ball. Kennon spent two full hours shaking hands with guests.

NEGRO SUPPORTERS of Kennon had segregated ball complete with floor show at the Temple Roof and floor dance hall. The governor did not appear.

DRAPED ON FLOAT were shrimp net and girls dressed for warm weather. Barrels of ice water were placed along parade route for perspiring spectators.

ROOSTING ON STATUARY—a work called The Pioneers—youngsters got good view of parade from the capitol. Schools in state were closed for occasion.

TAKING A BREATHER, majorette leans on fence of old state capitol. One casualty of day was drum major who fell doing flip in front of reviewing stand.

THE GIRL WITH 31 HEADS

If Wilhelm Hüsgen of Munich, Germany had been anything but a sculptor, he might have settled for birthday snapshots of his daughter Doris. But when Doris was only 2½ months old, Hüsgen proudly put her baby face into a bas-relief (lower right), and every year since he has faithfully sculptured a new head of his daughter. In the picture above, they wind upward chronologically from the first to the 31st head—still in clay on Hüsgen's pedestal as Doris, an artist herself now, poses for her father.

Doris can remember posing each year since she was 4. At 8, she insisted on holding her doll as she posed, but her father refused to permit it. "From an artistic point of view," he recalls, "the doll was simply impossible. It was a rag doll and had no profile." So subtle have been the changes in Doris' remarkably immobile face throughout the years that only occasional new hairdos seem to differentiate one head from the next. But her father is happy with his collection, and only Doris' stepmother actually dislikes the project. "The apartment is just too small to hold any more," she says. "Everywhere you turn, every closet you open, you see Doris."

Harpooning a Swordfish

CAN START

A DEADLY DUEL

1 "He's all yours!" the fisherman yelled. A giant broadbill was straight ahead. In the 'pulpit' on the schooner's bowsprit, I aimed my harpoon and let fly. That's where the fun began," writes an American friend of Canadian Club. "When I first saw swordfish ships off the tip of Cape Breton Island, Nova Scotia, I was told swordfishing is a serious business. But it made exciting sport for me . . .

2 "Up in the cross-trees, I had to hang on for dear life as the mast swayed. But that lofty vigil paid off—a swordfish, and a big one! I raced down, grabbed the harpoon and let him have it. The swordfish, nailed by my lily-iron, lit out for blue water . . .

3 "It was half an hour before the keg that marked the end of the harpoon line stopped its crazy gyrations. But when we lowered a dory to boat our catch, we got a surprise. The scrappy broadbill wasn't through yet. A last-stand drive rammed his sword clear through the hull of the dory . . .

4 "That sword-thrust nearly lost us the duel, but the schooner saved us and our prize. A real prize it was, too. '500 pounds,' the captain announced later . . . over a drink of Canadian Club!

5 "My swordfish was no record-breaker, but it was still a lot of fish. Nothing else can touch Canadian Club's record—it's the favorite almost everywhere I go."

Why this whisky's worldwide popularity? Canadian Club is light as scotch, rich as rye, satisfying as bourbon.

Yet it has a distinctive flavor that is all its own. You can stay with Canadian Club all evening long . . . in cocktails before dinner and tall ones afterward. There is one and only one Canadian Club, and no other whisky tastes quite like it in all the world.
